New System For Storage, Crop Support Under Study

Officials Preparing Long-Term Program To Equalize Price Aid to Farmers

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

A new long-range farm program, providing price supports for all crops and setting up a new system for storage of farm products, is under study by Administration agricultural leaders.

These leaders hope to have the program ready when the Agriculture Department is asked to present its views on necessary or desirable legislation to congressional committees, probably late in February or early in March.

The study breaks down the various crops into four categories, each with its own parity formula:

1. The so-called "basic" commodities in the present law, namely cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, rice and peanuts. These are now protected by mandatory price supports.
2. The Steagall commodities—commodities for which the Government requested increased production during the war emergency and protected by mandatory price supports—such as hogs, eggs, chickens, turkeys, milk and butterfat, dry peas and dry edible beans of certain varieties, soybeans, peanuts and flaxseed for oil, American-Egyptian cotton, potatoes and sweet potatoes.
3. Commodities storable for short periods, such as dried fruits, nuts, some citrus and deciduous fruits, etc.
4. Nonstorable or perishable products, such as green goods, truck crops, berries, etc.

The aim is to find a way to eliminate "discrimination" in farm price supports that many farmers, particularly fruit and vegetable growers, complain about.

Difference Noted

[The citrus grower, for instance, in December was getting 18 per cent of parity for grapefruit; 27 per cent of parity for oranges and 53 per cent of parity for lemons—while the midwestern grain grower was being loaned 90 per cent of parity on his wheat, corn, etc.]

The present price support law tries to get around these charges of discrimination by making supports of all crops except the "basic" commodities, and a few others, "permissible," or at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture. But the chief method of operation of price supports—Government loans on commodities in storage—is not feasible for perishable goods.

Mandatory price supports are available for less than 25 per cent of the total farm crops of the country and will be only slightly more than that if soybeans are added to the list of "basics" as suggested.

So far, the only method to aid price levels for perishable crops has been to buy up small amounts with Section 32 funds—portions of

Progressives Want Truman to Have Talk With Stalin

New York, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—The Progressive Party called on President Truman today to demonstrate that "peace is all we want" by meeting with Premier Stalin to negotiate differences and bring an end to the cold war.

In a statement, the Progressive Party expressed the hope that the shift in State Department personnel would mean a change in foreign policy, and suggested that the new Secretary of State meet with Soviet experts preparatory to a meeting between the President and Stalin.

It also called upon the President to repudiate the projected North Atlantic military alliance, and to "soften" the get-tough policy toward Russia.

D. C. Senate Body Favors Capital Vote

Majority of New Committee Backs Local Suffrage

By Thomas Winship
Post Reporter

A majority of the new Senate District Committee favors home rule for Washington.

A local sales tax to help pull District revenues out of the red also will have strong support.

And a $330 pay boost for the city's 7500 workers—who missed the boat in last year's Federal pay raise—will gain majority backing of the committee membership.

This was revealed yesterday in interviews by The Washington Post with the appointed Democratic members and the four freshman Republican Senators slated to serve.

It was also learned authoritatively that Senator John J. Williams (R., Del.) probably will fill one of the two remaining Republican posts on the 13-member committee. Republicans have six openings on this committee.

The other Republican assignment is up in the air, it was explained, owing to still unsettled GOP appointments no other committees.

All memberships are expected to be ironed out and announced Monday at the Senate Republican caucus.

Headed by Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.), a strong home rule advocate, the committee will have six members publicly favoring local voting rights. And of the four legislators who have withheld definite commitment, three are expected to be sympathetic to local suffrage.

Senator Olin D. Johnston (D., S. C.), a veteran member of the committee, is the only one who thus far stands squarely against the home rule issue publicly.

Lined up in favor of giving Washington residents a voice in their local government are:

Senators McGrath, Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.), Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.), Lester C. Hunt (D., Wyo.), Margaret Chase Smith (R.,

Slum Clearing Fund Lack Hit By McCarran

Congress Not Setting Good Example, Author Of Program Asserts

Senator Pat McCarran (D., Nev.), author of the District slum clearance program enacted in 1946, charged last night that Congress "is not setting a good example" by thus far withholding funds.

The District Redevelopment Land Agency, set up to administer the program, is seeking $3,400,000 for the next fiscal year. Both sessions of the Eightieth Congress failed to appropriate funds to start work in the city's slum areas.

Supporting the agency request, made by Chairman Mark Landsburgh, Senator McCarran said the agency should have the entire 20 million authorized by the act, and that "the money should be appropriated just as soon as the land agency can use it."

"The enactment of this legislation by the Congress," McCarran said, "was a recognition of the appalling slum conditions in the National Capital. These conditions have not improved since the law was passed, and the need for slum clearance is even greater in Washington today than it was in 1946."

McCarran pointed out that his

30,000 Unionists Let T-H Law Affidavits Lapse

By the United Press

The National Labor Relations Board reported last night that nearly 30,000 labor union officials have let their non-Communist affidavits lapse without filing new ones.

Under the Taft-Hartley labor law, no union can use the services of the labor board unless its officers swear once a year that they are not Communists.

Board officials said many union officers probably forgot their original statements were good for a year only. Many others probably are in the process of sending new statements to the board and still others are waiting to see what happens to the Taft-Hartley Act

9 Firemen Hurt as Blaze Ruins Alexandria Bowling Alleys

A four-alarm blaze of undetermined origin swept an Alexandria bowling alley yesterday, caused damage estimated at between $100,000 and $150,000, and slightly injured nine firemen.

The fire struck the Alexandria Recreation Center, a 32-alley bowling center at Montgomery and St. Asaph sts., just off Washington st.

The structure's ground-level story and basement were completely gutted by the flames, which were first observed about 5:45 a. m.

Fire Chief Bernard J. Padgett, responding to the blaze, said he could see flames towering 50 feet into the air above the building when he was six blocks away.

All left standing of the Colonial brick structure were the walls, and the cupola over the front half. The roof over bowling alleys to the rear was completely demolished.

Charles H. Tompkins, builder and a member of the corporation which owns the building, said it would cost $250,000 to reproduce the building today. Insurance coverage is about $200,000, he said.

Four of Alexandria's five engine companies, and two out of three of the truck companies responded to the blaze, which gave firemen a five-hour battle. So did the Penn Daw Rescue Squad, and later the Mount Vernon Fire Co. in Fairfax County.

Padgett said the fire remained out of control so long because "it might have begun as early as 2 or 2:30 this morning." The solid walls and only one set of steps

Truman Asks Extension Of Trade Act

Fast Action Promised In Congress; Speed Is Held Essential as Talks Start in April

By the United Press

President Truman yesterday asked and was promised quick congressional action to extend the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act for two years without the restrictions imposed by the Republican Eightieth Congress.

Mr. Truman made his request in identical letters to Chairman Walter F. George (D., Ga.) of the Senate Finance Committee and Chairman Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.) of the House Ways and Means Committee.

He said speed is essential because negotiations will begin in April to extend to 13 more countries the 1947 agreements on tariff and trade which the United States signed with 22 nations.

George said after a conference with Doughton that he hoped both houses could approve the two-year extension of the act before the end of February.

He said Doughton assured him the House committee would give "preferential treatment" to the President's request.

Doughton later told reporters his committee would take up the trade measure as soon as the committee is organized.

"It is the intention of the majority of the committee," Doughton said, "to give the President what he wants."

As soon as the House acts, George said, the Senate committee will take up the proposal "immediately."

George said he favors returning to the old Trade Agreements Act "with some minor administrative changes that may be necessary."

He said the Republican Congress made "a great mistake" in enacting the revised trade agreement law last year. The 1948 act merely extended the old law for one year—to June 30, 1949—and increased the authority of the tariff commission to halt reciprocal agreements with other nations.

In his letters to George and Doughton, Mr. Truman urged that the "hampering restrictions" of the 1948 act be repealed and that the old law be restored in full. He asked its extension until June 12, 1951.

He asserted that the original act was "a practical, cooperative effort to remove unnecessary obstacles to the building of a stable and prosperous world."

"Unless nations can sell each other the products of their agriculture, labor and industry to the greatest possible extent, there can be no sure foundation for economic peace," he said.

"Unless world trade is increased, the tremendous investment we are making toward world economic recovery will be largely wasted.

"Unless trade restrictions are relaxed, the lot of the private trader in international trade will become increasingly difficut."

British Spending Doubles in 10 Years

London, Jan. 8 (AP).—Britons spent twice as much for such things as food, drink, cigarettes and clothes in the third quarter of 1948 as they did 10 years ago.

Government statistics made public today showed the total was $8,124,000,000 compared with a quarterly average of $4,288,000,000 in 1938.

Israel Downs Five British Patrol Planes

3 Over Palestine, Tel Aviv Claims; Tommies Are Sent To Trans-Jordan

London, Jan. 8 (AP).—Britain angrily accused Israel today of shooting down five RAF patrol planes over Egypt and gave her fliers a free hand to fight back.

At the same time she disclosed an unspecified number of British troops have been moved into Aqaba at the request of her ally, King Abdullah, to guard that strategic Red Sea port in Trans-Jordan.

In the tense atmosphere, Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin gave up his week-end in the country and stayed close to his desk to watch developments.

[The New York Herald Tribune correspondent in London said the Foreign Office spokesman stressed "the grave concern" with which Britain regards the situation in the Israeli-Arab conflict. The correspondent, Kenneth Bilby, led off his dispatch from London with the words: "A grave new crisis developed today between Israel and Great Britain . . ."]

Over Israel, Jews Claim

At Tel Aviv, Israel officially admitted shooting down five British planes, four by air action and one by antiaircraft fire. The Jewish spokesman emphatically declared that the fight in which three of the planes were shot down "began, was carried on and ended over Israel." He indicated the other two planes were downed in the Palestine border area.

At New York, the British United Nations delegate, Sir Terrence Shone, delivered a "sharp" British protest to Arthur Lourie, Israeli representative at the U. N., at the latter's home.

Lourie refused to transmit the note to his government because he said it was improperly addressed to "the Jewish authorities at Tel Aviv."

Britain has refused to recognize Israel and apparently took the unusual step of lodging its protest through the Jewish U. N. delegation in an effort to avoid dealing with Israel as a legal entity.

Protest Given Bunche

A copy of the British protest was given to Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, U. N. Palestine mediator. Bunche is leaving for the Island of Rhodes where Jewish-Egyptian armistice talks are expected to begin Tuesday.

[The United Press said the picture was further complicated by a British official's remark in Cairo that one of the planes—a Tempest—was shot down in a dog fight. His remark was the only indication from the British that the British planes might have fought back.]

The British Air Ministry's version of the incident was this:

Yesterday morning two formations, one of four Spitfires and one of a single Mosquito and four Tempest fighters, left their Suez Canal zone base in Egypt on reconnaissance to "ascertain the depth and scale of Jewish incursion into Egyptian territory."

They had "strict orders" not to cross the border into Palestine.

The Spitfires were attacked by Jewish aircraft and one of the Spitfires returned. The leader of the Spitfires reported he was attacked while 15 miles inside Egypt and that he was compelled to bail out. He was wounded and picked up by an Arab near Brigabramir.

The Federal Diary

Postmaster General's Case Shows Federal Pay Injustice

Editor's note: This is the first of two articles on the Federal executive salary scale. The second article will appear tomorrow.

By Jerry Kluttz
Post Reporter

Congress has permitted an accident of circumstance to do to the Federal service something it would never attempt by legislation.

You couldn't get a single member of Congress to take seriously a bill that would limit the holding of high Government office to:

1. Men who have independent private wealth and incomes;
2. Mediocre people for whom even comparatively low Federal executive salaries are high in comparison with what they could make in private business;
3. Individuals who are willing to jump in and out of Government at personal financial sacrifice, and finally,
4. To deny executive jobs to able career people coming up through civil service ranks because they do not have the necessary private income to afford the jobs.

Yet, a combination of inflation, high taxes, and an executive salary structure that hasn't been changed in years has brought about a situation in which this is about true.

This is a prize example of what I have in mind:

Not long ago I went in to see Jesse M. Donaldson, the Postmaster General, who is unquestionably the outstanding career man in Government. The "General" happened to be in a retrospective mood about his beloved postal service and his amazing career. But he chilled me when he said:

"I'm terribly sorry to say it, but if I had my life to live over again I wouldn't enter the postal service. The rewards, the compensations, are too meager. "Then he slowly added:

"I love my job and it is a great personal satisfaction to me to hold it, but, frankly, I can barely afford to be the Postmaster General. This position requires money. I have been in the Federal service all of my working life and I haven't had the opportunity to accumulate it."

Here's a man whose career has followed the best American traditions. He entered the postal service as a $50-a-month mail messenger more than 40 years ago. He has literally worked his way up the ladder through sheer ability and merit to take over a Cabinet post that had been reserved exclusively in recent years for the chairman of the political party in power.

Donaldson's down-to-earth views on his remarkable career would be akin to a degree if something similar were said by Charles Wilson of General Electric, Louis B.

Air Force Expansion Sought by Symington; Fears Time Is Short

Enlistments Suffice

Army Cancels Draft Orders During February and March

The Army announced yesterday that it would draft no men under the peacetime Selective Service System during the months of February and March and canceled an original call for 5000 men scheduled for induction in February.

Army Secretary Kenneth Royall said voluntary enlistments and reenlistments have averaged 35,000 a month for the past few months and have made Selective Service calls unnecessary for the next two months.

Frank D. Norton, deputy District draft director, said last night that in view of the reduced draftee requirements the draft offices here would cut the number of men called each month for physical examinations by half beginning January 17.

At present the District's January quota of 50 men—reduced from 101 by an Army cutback in November lowering the Nation's draft call from 20,000 to 10,000 men—will be inducted as scheduled this month, Norton said, and plans to call up the February quota of 10 men will not be canceled until his office receives official directives, he added.

In explanation of the Army's action yesterday, Secretary Royall referred to the Selective Service Act of 1948, which requires the Army to limit its draft calls to the difference between requirements and voluntary enlistments. He explained that as long as enlistments remain sufficient to maintain the strength of the Army, "there will be no calls for inductions."

In November, 1948, the Army had announced that reductions in draft calls were forced by President Truman's 15-million-dollar defense budget ceiling for the 1950 fiscal year limiting Army strength to 677,000 officers and men, nearly 25 per cent less than the 900,000 authorized by Congress last year. The Army's strength on November 1, 1948, was 645,067 men.

The Army announcement gave the Selective Service System cause for concern. Director Lewis B. Hershey has expressed fear that with no work to be done, the draft board machinery, manned for the most part by volunteers, will fall to pieces.

Reds Advance As China Bids For Mediation

Appeal Reported Made To Diplomats of U. S., Britain and France

Nanking, Jan. 8 (AP).—China's government reportedly made a desperate bid for three-power mediation of the civil war today as the Communists fought their way inside of Tientsin and loosed intense attacks on Nanking's last defense line short of the Yangtze.

The ambassadors of the United States, Britain and France were summoned to the foreign office. A usually reliable source said they had been requested to ask their governments to try to mediate the war.

Neither the Ambasasdors nor the Foreign Office would comment. It was considered likely that mediation or an appeal to the United Nations was under study.

[The United Press reported that a reliable source said Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek plans to leave, possibly within three days, for an "indefinite vacation" in Formosa.

[Chiang, it was understood, will discontinue active direction of China's national affairs during his vacation, and will turn over the government to Vice President Li Tsung-jen.

Full Dictatorial Powers Taken by Junta in Peru

Lima, Peru, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—The revolutionary army junta headed by Gen. Manuel Odria formally assumed full dictatorial powers today.

Set up on October 29 after an army coup overthrew President Jose Luis Bustamante, the junta issued a decree by which it took over all powers "that the constitution confers on the executive and legislative" branches of government.

Promulgated simultaheously was a statute providing that the junta, consisting of a president and 12 state ministers, will rule by decree law.

Joint Foreign Policy 'Dead,' Capehart Says

GOP Critics Line Up To Analyze Minutely Acheson Nomination

By The Associated Press

Senator Capehart (R., Ind.) called the bipartisan policy "dead" last night, and Republican critics lined up to fight—or minutely analyze—nomination of Dean Acheson as Secretary of State.

Because Republicans were not consulted by President Truman in advance about the Cabinet choice, Capehart told reporters he regards the action as "another slap at the bipartisan foreign policy."

He said this, piled on top of the Democrats' action last week in taking top-heavy control of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, demonstrated that two-party cooperation on foreign affairs is at an end.

"The Democrats have broken up the bipartisan foreign policy and it's the best thing that ever happened to the country," he told a reporter. He said he now considers himself a "free agent" and gave notice that he and Republicans of like views are ready to battle Administration ideas they don't like.

He predicted that Republicans will demand a full airing of Acheson's views, a move also called for by Senator Vandenberg (R., Mich.).

Describing Acheson as "a distinguished American with wide experience in foreign affairs and with many proved qualifications for this critical responsibility," the Michigan senator said:

"I expect the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will fully explore his viewpoints when it considers the nomination."

Friends added this up to an indorsement by Vandenberg—with reservations—of an appointee who certainly would not have been the Michigan senator's first choice for the place had he been asked about it.

Vandenberg was not consulted in advance by the President—a change of Administration tactics from the time a few months ago when President Truman was reported to have passed over Acheson, his first choice, to name Paul G. Hoffman as Marshall Plan administrator.

Hoffman had the vigorous support of Vandenberg.

Truman Spending Plans Invite Bankruptcy, Halleck Declares

By The Associated Press

A Republican lawmaker complained yesterday that President Truman's spending program "cannot be fulfilled without inviting bankruptcy."

The complaint came from Representative Halleck of Indiana, who was the Republican floor leader last session when his party was in the majority.

Halleck cut loose at the Truman spending program less than 48 hours before the President's detailed budget for the next fiscal year goes to Congress, at noon Monday. This is expected to ask appropriations approaching $41,900,000,000—the largest peacetime budget in history.

Using figures prepared by the Republican National Committee, Halleck issued a statement saying that the program Mr. Truman called for in his state of the Union message last Wednesday would add more than 12 billion dollars a year to present costs.

Halleck forecast that the Government will spend "several hundred million dollars" more than it takes in next year even if none of the President's new projects are started.

He estimated it would cost about 100 million dollars a year to administer an anti-inflation program including wage and price controls. What he called "the proposed venture of the Government into the steel-producing business" was tagged at five billion dollars.

He set the St. Lawrence Seaway down for 500 million dollars; new public works, one billion dollars a

Nation-Wide Radar And Radio Network Cited as Need in Secretary's Report

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Air Secretary Symington yesterday reported notable advances in Air Force management and scientific development while citing weaknesses in inadequate housing and lack of a defense warning net.

His report to Defense Secretary Forrestal was the first since the Air Force was installed as an independent arm of the National Military Establishment. Included was a lengthy report on organization and operations by Gen. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, Air Force Chief of Staff.

Cites Various Factors

Symington took occasion to urge again the 70-group Air Force authorized by Congress last year but which depends for accomplishment on annual appropriations. Referring to the 70-group project as "the four-year program," he said it "aims at creating an Air Force in being capable of meeting whatever international crises may be forced upon this country." Then he warned:

"The expenditures of money which this program requires are great. Legislative and executive authorities must constantly weigh the state of world conditions, the military needs of the country and the efficiency and economy with which the Air Force is carrying out the program.

"But I solemnly urge that there be most carefully weighed the importance of stability and resoluteness. This country has none too much time to provide itself with the means of its own protection.

"It cannot afford the waste of its time and resources that are inherent in vacillation and stop-and-start planning."

Lists Essentials

In addition to the "four-year program," Symington advanced as essentials if the United States is to "provide itself with the means of its own protection."

1. A widespread and complex system of radar and radio installations, control centers and trained personnel to detect and locate hostile aircraft and direct fighters to them. Without it, he said, "our own fighter aireraft cannot hope to intercept attackers."
2. Adequate troop housing at Air Force bases in the United States, without which it has been impossible to induce highly skilled officers and men to remain in the service.
3. A system of bases designed for modern aicraft and for increases under the "four-year program." Existing bases, he said, meet only two-thirds of Air Force needs and most of these have outlived the five-year period of usefulness for which they were designed.
4. Prompt unification of medical services within the National

Rangy 'Stu' Symington's Trumpeting Call Signals Opening Round in Air Power Battle

That trumpeting call you heard last night was sounded by Secretary of Air W. Stuart Symington. The cry—a mixture of coo, woo, and warning—signals the opening round of the 1949 battle for and against the 70-group Air Force.

The rangy frame and the blond-ish head of the Air Force's civilian boss is sure to be in the middle of the free-for-all because "Stu" Symington is the No. 1 champion of "Air Power is Peace Power." Translated into military might, the slogan means that Air Force must have 70 groups, about 7000 planes and 400,000 men — in order to be ready to take on any potential foe of Uncle Sam.

W. STUART SYMINGTON
In the middle

The country's first Secretary of Air is no flier himself. He became air conscious just before the United States got into the world war. In '41 Symington—then a St. Louis industrialist—led a group of technicians to England to study airplane turret production.

Two months later, Symington returned, convinced Washington officialdom his Emerson Electric Manufacturing Co. could build better turrets than the British, rounded up a staff of experts, and was off to St. Louis to build a 15 million-dollar additional plant with Government funds. Emerson's board of directors quickly approved the plans of its whirlwind president. As the meeting broke up, one of the directors approached Symington and abashedly asked: "What in the heck is a turret, anyway?"

The comment was an unconscious tribute to Symington's legendary powers of persuasion. During the fight on Capitol Hill for the armed services merger legislation, Symington, then Assistant Secretary of War for Air, collared a reporter and declared: "Give me 30 seconds and I'll sell you the advantages of unification." The reporter shook his head. "Nothing doing, Mr. Secretary," he replied, "in 30 seconds you'll sell me anything."

When Congress finally approved the merger, gangling "Stu" Symington was named Secretary of Air to serve under his long-time friend and golfing partner, Secretary of Defense Jim Forrestal.

It was President Truman who inveigled the enthusiasm-bubbling Symington to take on a full-time Federal post. Senator Truman had met turret-producer Symington through their mutual friend, John Snyder, now Secretary of Treasury. A few months after entering the House, Mr. Truman called in Symington.

"Stuart," said the President, "I want to drop a load of coal on you." The "load of coal" was the job of formulating policy for the disposition of 100 billion dollars in surplus property in a manner to encourage small business and discourage monopoly. "Stu" rounded up a band of eager, smart aides, called in the FBI to balk the specter of scandal and plunged into the world's largest junkpile.

In the next seven months, Symington worked out his first Federal merger—a plan for unifying the dozen agencies each having a thumb in the surplus pie. His proudest feat—and perhaps his most important one—was the sale of the war-born, Government-built aluminum plants so as to set up competition against the Aluminum Corporation of America.

Symington meant to quit Washington then, but the President asked him to stay on as Assistant Secretary of War for Air. He led the fight for the merger. Thereby he earned the post of Air Secretary, and considerable unpopularity in the Navy.

During recent months there've been rumors that "Stu" was in Harry's doghouse. It was said that the Air Secretary had had a plane prepared for Tom Dewey, on the assumption the New York Governor would be elected President. Symington hotly denied this rumor, showed the plane had been ordered for the transporting of Government officials long before Dewey was even nominated.

Whatever the rumors, the President himself apparently moved to dissipate them by inviting "Stu" to visit him in Key West after the election. Lately, too, Symington's been along with the President at social affairs.

"Stu" Symington, now 47, was ready to retire from industry, and undertake the serious business of improving his golf stroke, at the age of 36. Scion of a patrician Baltimore family, he was born in Amherst, Mass.; enlisted in the Army at 17, came out a lieutenant. Then he played tennis for Yale.

For a few years, "Stu" kicked around, trying his hand at various family (Symington and Gould) interests. He struck out on his own in '32, headed up Rustless Iron and Steel, and when he sold out five years later, was ready to retire. The following year, however, he went to St. Louis to run the Emerson Co. In a short period he was paying the stockholders their first dividend in 10 years, and the plant, notorious for its labor troubles, became a model of good labor-management relations.

The Air Secretary lives with his wife, Evelyn, daughter of Republican Representative James W. Wadsworth of New York, at the Shoreham. They've two sons, like their dad, Yalemen.

Symington believes that the United Nations is no stronger than the strength of the United States.

"By the same token," he adds, "there is no greater guarantee of security for America than our own strength."

Big Air Force Is 'Urgent,' Symington Says in Report

Military Establishment to assure most efficient use of existing medical personnel and facilities.

5. Action to funnel into the Air Force one third of the graduates annually of Annapolis and West Point, with a separate Air Academy the alternative.

6. Implementation of many of the recommendations of the Committee on Civilian Components which urged, among other changes, amalgamation of the Air National Guard with the Air Reserve under the Air Force.

The Secretary's proposal for a radar screen around the United States was assured of quick attention on Capitol Hill. Representative Vinson (D., Ga.), who will be chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, has introduced a bill to authorize it.

"The need for this sort of protection is very urgent," Vinson said today, "and it should be established at once."

Vinson said his bill will be taken up as soon as the committee is selected, possibly by the end of this week. He estimated the radar network would cost at least 50 million dollars.

Symington expressed dissatisfaction with production delays in aircraft production and concern over current shortages in troop carrier and cargo airplanes. Existing military and civilian transports combined, he said, are inadequate to the demands of mobility in case of war. He suggested Federal aid to develop transport prototypes which could be quickly built in quantity.

As for production delays, Symington blamed three conditions:

1. Technical difficulties incident to transfer from conventional to jet types of aircraft.

2. Limitations on materials and parts resulting from reconversion of suppliers to civilian production.

3. Unfavorable labor situations due to expansion during a period of full employment and rising costs.

Facilities for research and development in supersonic aircraft and guided missiles, Symington said, are "so inadequate as to be a serious limiting factor to that air superiority considered essential to the security of the United States." He urged legislation to establish promptly a supersonic development center and a joint long-range proving ground for guided missiles.

In the field of aeronautical research and development, however, the Air Secretary found at least eight accomplishments during the year at which to point with pride. These were:

1. Flight at supersonic speeds by the X-1.

2. Introduction of 13 new models of aircraft.

3. Greatly increased range of heavy bombers and other types.

4. Perfection of refueling in the air, still further increasing aircraft range.

5. Improvement of tractor-type gear for landing in rough ground.

6. A 25-per-cent increase in the power output of both jet and conventional engines.

7. Projection of missiles more than 100,000 feet into the upper air.

8. Completion of the second year of unbroken daily all-weather flights between Wilmington, Ohio, and Washington.

Other examples of accomplishment cited by Symington were concerned chiefly with organization and administration of the Air Force as a separate entity within the military establishment. In management and establishment of an improved budget structure, as well as in modernization of procurement, he said the Air Force had approximated the best business methods. He noted improvement in investigative and inspection systems, military intelligence and public information and a "substantial" rise in individual and unit proficiency.

As part of its effort to meet current emergencies, as contrasted with long-range planning, the Air Force met the Soviet blockade of Berlin with the air lift, Symington recalled. But it was in behalf of the 70-group project that he made his first and most eloquent argument.

This program was authorized as a four-year project by the Republican Congress last year over opposition of Forrestal and the White House. Expectation that the 1950 budget would contain no provision for this program was aroused by a recent statement of Forrestal that all three services would have to make "adjustments" for economy's sake. President Truman has insisted that the military budget he held to no more than 15 billion dollars for fiscal 1950, within which figure it is unlikely that provision can be made for progress toward 70 combat groups by 1952.

While "consciously" avoiding use of the 70-group designation for the program, Symington went to bat for it wholeheartedly as the "four-year program." By authorizing it last year, he contended, Congress had made it "an integral part of national policy," one aim of which was "attaining by 1952 supremacy in air power."

"The four-year program," he declared, "aims at creating as of 1952 an Air Force in being capable of meeting whatever international crisis may be forced upon this country . . . In the atomic age of lightning attack, air power instantly capable of sustained defense and sustained retaliatory attack is a basic need of the Nation."

The program, Symington said, was based on two careful civilian studies and full debate by Congress and takes into consideration this Nation's world obligations and a realistic appraisal of the putative enemy. Furthermore, he added, it weighs:

1. The emergence of the polar frontier as the possible decisive theater of operations.

2. The complexity of modern weapons with the inevitable time lag between appropriation and production.

3. The "considered conclusion" that the present monopoly of atomic weapons cannot be counted on beyond 1952.

The four-year program, Symington concluded, meets these conditions and demands by:

1. Providing for replacement of obsolescent aircraft with types capable of meeting "wholly different" modern conditions.

2. Making possible a research program assuring the best possible equipment.

3. Providing "the long-range striking force which alone can choke off hostile attack at its source."

4. Keeping alive a healthy aircraft industry without which prompt emergency expansion would be impossible.

During the year, Symington reported, strength of the Air Force rose to 387,730 officers and men, with indications that the recruitment goal for this year will be met. Acceptances of new aircraft increased 56 per cent over fiscal 1947, including a 40 per cent increase in jet fighter strength, while "several thousand" aircraft were withdrawn from storage and placed in operation.

Symington included a word of caution against overconfidence which might be induced by success of the Berlin airlift. The blockade, he pointed out, was imposed in the summer, allowing three months of good weather in which the facilities for sustained lift could be built up. It will not be possible, he said, "to count on future crises being so ineptly timed by those who would put pressure upon us."

To meet any crisis at any time, he concluded, the primary essential is "the instant readiness to be accomplished under the four-year program."

Joint Policy Declared 'Dead'

Haven, Conn., that he "will certainly" vote for Acheson. That indicated that some of the Republicans are willing to go along on the nomination.

But Senator Wherry of Nebraska, the Republican floor leader, said he was surprised that the President did not consult with Vandenberg before making the appointment.

"So far as I personally am concerned, I have not changed my mind about Acheson," said Wherry, who fought Acheson's confirmation as Undersecretary of State in September, 1945.

In another vein Representative Vorys (R., Ohio) last night said Dean Acheson can maintain a bipartisan foreign policy as Secretary of State if President Truman lets him.

A member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Vorys expressed his views in an address before the Ohio Society of Washington.

"Dean Acheson showed great skill and tact and an understanding of bipartisan teamwork with Congress when he was in the State Department before," says Vorys.

"There was more of this in the latter part of the Roosevelt Administration than under Truman. Acheson knows how to do it if the President permits him."

Despite the Republican uprising over the Democratic seizure of a three-man majority on the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator Connally (D., Tex.), new chairman of the committee, predicted that Acheson would be confirmed. This seemed certain, if only in view of the Democratic majority.

Besides, it is customary for the Senate to go along with a presidential Cabinet choice.

Senator Smith (R., N. J.) also urged that the Foreign Relations Committee explore with Acheson his "views on the pending critical issues of our foreign policy."

Smith called Acheson and James Webb, named as Undersecretary, "two distinguished Americans with a background of wide experience and important national service."

Senator Mundt (R., S. Dak.), former member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, suggested that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee hear testimony from Whittaker Chambers, admitted former Communist courier, and Adolf A. Berle, jr., former Assistant Secretary of State, on the Acheson appointment.

Mundt also urged that former Ambassador Lane be called as a witness, adding:

"I have no personal information or reasons for believing that Dean Acheson would not now support and favor a program designed to protect America and the free areas of the world against further oppressive invasions by the Communist conspiracy."

Mundt asserted that "like many other Americans," at one time Acheson "appeared to favor an appeasant program toward Russia which the march of events and an analysis of Communist objectives demonstrated to be an attitude dangerous to the preservation of peace and the protection of our national security."

Mundt did not explain why he thought the three men should be called.

Berle testified last August before the Un-American Activities Committee, and went into State Department behind-the-scenes affairs during 1944 when Russia was our wartime ally. He disclosed that two groups in the department were split in their views about Russia, one being "Mr. Acheson's group." Acheson was Undersecretary of State.

Berle adhered, he said, to a group that felt that the Russians were not going to be sympathetic or cooperative, while the "Acheson group" took an opposite position. One group, he said, favored a stronger policy toward Russia, and the other wanted to play down friction between Washington and Moscow.

Berle said that Alger Hiss belonged to the Acheson group. Hiss, then a State Department official, now is under indictment for perjury in denying that he gave Chambers secret State Department papers some six years before the policy situation described by Berle.

Arthur Bliss Lane, Ambassador to Poland in the period after the war, declined to comment on Mundt's suggestion that he be called.

Lane, in a book on his experiences, was critical of State Department policy toward the Polish Communist government, under Acheson. He described the policy as "financial appeasement" of Poland and other Red satellite states.

[Dean Acheson aroused Russia's ire on February 10, 1947, when, testifying before the Senate Atomic Energy Committee, he described the Soviet's foreign policy as "an aggressive and expanding one." He was a witness at hearings in connection with the appointment of David Lilienthal as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

[Russian Foreign Minister Molotov protested officially against Acheson's remark, which he called "rudely slanderous and hostile to the Soviet Union." Secretary of State Marshall subsequently rejected the protest.—Editor's Note.]

President Truman was asked Friday whether the Acheson appointment portended any change in the stiff policy toward Russia and he emphasized that it does not.

Vandenberg, who was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee in the Eightieth Congress, expressed deep regret in his statement at the retirement of Secretary Marshall, whom he called "one of the great Americans of all time."

The Senator also said he was regretful over the retirement of Undersecretary of State Robert Lovett.

Capehart was outspoken in his criticism of the Senate Democrats in voting themselves 8 of the 13 seats on the Foreign Relations Committee. The ratio in the Republican Congress was 7 to 6.

Uncanny, Photo-Guided Missile Is Hinted

By The Associated Press

American military scientists appear to be working on the idea of a "thinking" guided missile that will identify the intended target from a picture, then attack it.

A hint of this uncanny flying monster with a brain was contained in a "Glossary of Guided Missile Terms," made public last night by the Research and Development Board.

The glossary's reference to the project was terse, saying merely this:

"Guidance, homing, active—a system of homing guidance wherein both the source, for illuminating the target, and the receiver are carried within the missile."

The definition seemed to relate to an idea which some scientists have considered. Roughly, it is as follows:

A guided missile (it could be a rocket or merely a pilotless plane) is fitted with a television set and a picture of an intended target—perhaps an aerial photograph of a city. The missile is launched in the general direction of the target. When it arrives at a point where the pattern of the picture matches what its television "eye" sees, the missile "homes in" on the target.

This explanation is vastly oversimplified. Involved are thousands of complex electronic elements actuating computing devices which make instantaneous but complicated reckonings; link the "eye" and the "brain" of the missile to its controls; relay back to the base from which the missile was launched information on where it is and what it "sees."

This awesome weapon is only one of a number of variations of "homing" guided missiles, projected or in experimental stage.

The Air Force already is experimenting with others, including missiles or glides bombs which ride a beam of light, a ray of heat or a radar beam. A "heat-seeking" bomb has been tested by the Air Force, reportedly with fair results. But, say experimenters, it needs improvement—especially the ability to figure out the difference between the heat from a cottage chimney and the smokestack of a steel factory.

Then there is the "command guidance" type of missile. This, by comparison with the other gadgets, is a simple affair. Radio signals from the control plane or a base actuate the fins of the missile or controls of the pilotless airplane and steer it on its course. Most common form of the "command guidance" system is the "drone" plane, controlled from a "mother" plane.

The glossary is the first official publication of its kind.

While the guided missiles experts are familiar with the words—because they coined them—other agencies of the national military establishment need this special dictionary to understand what their colleagues are talking about.

'Peace' Parleys Set By Britain, France

Runs Blockade

Berliner Fired on by Red Police

Berlin, Jan. 8 (AP).—Communist German police fired on a German wagon driver who ran the tightened Soviet blockade of western Berlin today.

A volley of five shots missed him but two bullets struck a pedestrian in the leg.

It was the first shooting to follow intensified blockade measures by the Russians who dug trenches across roads in and around the city to stop smugglers.

On this 199th day of the blockade, Lord Mayor Ernst Reuter of the western sections praised the Allied airlift as a "first class miracle" which would save the city from the Communists.

He expressed doubt the blockade will end at an early date, but said, "They (the Russians) will give in when they see that we can get along indefinitely."

The lord mayor predicted the Soviets will set up a seperate east German government after the Bonn constitutioal convention and creation of the west German government.

[The United Press said Allied pilots today fought a losing battle with fog in a bid to set a new weekly airlift tonnage record. Bad weather reduced the number of flights. The fliers brought in 2903 tons of goods in 332 flights today, boosting the week's total to 39,118. The record is 41,287.]

London, Jan. 8 (AP).—Britain and France will have a "peace conference" of their own Wednesday.

They are West Europe's main partners in trying to achieve prosperity, political unity and military security for the continent, and in the fight to beat back communism.

But their statesmen are worried because policies of the two countries clash at many points.

In an effort to straighten out their difficulties, France's Foreign Minister Robert Schuman will arrive Wednesday to talk it all over with Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin in a two-day meeting.

What Will Be Discussed

British and French officials expect them to dwell mainly on whether to set up a parliament of Europe for western anti-Communist governments, and on Germany's political future.

These other issues also will come up:

The future of Italy's prewar African colonies.

The North Atlantic security pact.

Recognition of Israel and its admission into the United Nations.

Coordination of French and British colonial policies in the Far East and Africa.

France is pressing Britain to accept a long-time plan for creating a parliament of Europe to provide a positive, dynamic alternative to what communism offers.

Britain frankly does not like the idea, but the United States, Belgium, Italy and several other politically important countries support the project.

Countries Disagree

France wants international ownership of industries in the Ruhr. Socialist Britain disagrees. It desires to have the basic industries of Germany nationalized, like its own.

Britain would like to become the trustee, on behalf of the United Nations, for Cirenaic (eastern Libia) and Tripolitania (western Libia).

But Tripolitania borders French Algeria. France does not like British policy toward the Arabs, and would prefer to have Italy administer Tripolitania.

There is a good deal of political pressure in France to recognize the new Jewish state, and support its efforts to enter the United Nations. The British so far have managed to persuade France to take no action.

Soviet Church Lays Slaying To Vatican

Moscow, Jan. 8 (AP).—The Journal of the Moscow Patriarch said today an "agent of the Vatican" assassinated Dr. Lvov O. Gravil Kostelnik, Protopresbyter of the Russian Orthodox Church, last fall.

The accusation was contained in a brief statement by Nikolai, Metropolitan of Krutitski and Kolomna. The statement said Kostelnik was killed near his home on September 20.

Patriarch Alexei of Moscow and all Russia made a similar charge in a statement dated September 21, but Alexei's statement was not published until today.

Alexei was quoted as saying the assassin was "one of humanity's degenerates, a member of the Ukrainian bourgeois nationalist underground, who without doubt acted at the orders of the Vatican."

"The Vatican found its path to avenging itself" on Kostelnik, Alexei said, because the protopresbyter "helped his western brothers find truth and leadership in holy Orthodoxy."

Kostelnik was a leader in the movement which resulted in the Uniat Church of the western Ukraine severing its 350-year-old ties with the Roman Catholic Church and becoming part of the Orthodox Church in March, 1946.

Vatican Sources Deny Assassination Charge

Vatican City, Jan. 8 (AP).—Unofficial but informed Vatican sources tonight flatly denied a Russian charge that a Vatican agent had assassinated Dr. Lvov O. Gavril Kostelnik.

The charge was interpreted by these informants as Communist propaganda.

Two Japs Surrender On Iwo Jima a Bit Late

Tokyo, Jan. 8 (AP).—Nearly four years after American troops took the island, two Japanese machine gunners surrendered Thursday on Iwo Jima, the Army announced today.

They were clean and well-fed, each had a recent haircut. They were wearing warm American uniforms.

They lived on food stolen from the Americans and canned what they didn't eat up.

Cold Kills 800 Chinese

Shanghai, Jan. 8 (AP).—More than 800 bodies, mostly those of beggars, were found on Shanghai streets this week as severe cold gripped the refugee-jammed city. More than 5000 are estimated to have died from hunger and exposure here the last three months.

Russians Reported Barring Austrian Official's Speech

Vienna, Austria, Jan. 8 (U.P.)—The Russians prohibited Austrian Secretary of the Interior Ferdinand Graf from delivering a scheduled speech over radio Ravag tonight, a spokesman for the Austrian People Party said.

Ravag is the only Austrian-operated station in the country. Its studio is in the Russian zone of Vienna.

Graf's speech dealt mostly with the coming elections and other internal problems, but it contains the sentence: "Any compromise with communism is tantamount to suicide for democrats."

The spokesman said Graf refused to submit the text to the Russians yesterday, and when he arrived at the studio tonight, a Russian officer told him he would not be permitted to speak.

Gen. Smith Leaves Florida Hospital

Punta Gorda, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP).—Lieut. Gen. Walter Bedell Smith was released last night from Charlotte hospital after treatment of a stomach disorder.

Smith, Ambassador to the Soviet Union, suffered a recurrence of a stomach ailment while on a hunting trip. His companions are Gen. Omar Bradley, Army Chief of Staff, and Lieut. Gen. C. W. Wickersham.

The Ambassador went duck hunting this morning.

Mindszenty Asked U. S. Aid To Guard Relic

New York, Jan. 8 (U.P.)—Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York, revealed today that he had interceded with the United States War Department at the request of Cardinal Mindszenty, Primate of Hungary, who asked the United States to withhold the sacred crown of St. Stephen from Hungary's Communist government.

Making public his correspondence with the War Department, Spellman announced that he feared there was no way under international law by which the crown could be withheld. The Communist government recently arrested Cardinal Mindszenty.

Spellman wrote Secretary of War Robert Patterson on July 28, 1947: "Cardinal Mindszenty asks that the supreme American military command, if possible, safeguard it (the crown) in this country (the United States) or entrust it to the care of his holiness, Pope Pius XII."

Patterson's successor in office, Kenneth C. Royall, replied on August 11 that "since the restitution of sacred relics other than to the government of origin is not properly within the discretion of the military government authorities, I have taken the liberty of forwarding a copy of your letter to the Department of State requesting its careful consideration of your request."

Spellman said he received no word from the State Department.

(At Washington, Hungarian refugee officials indicated Mindszenty feared the Communists of his homeland not only would desecrate the holy relic but also use its symbolism to further their political purposes. State Department officials indicated there was no intention of moving it from Army custody in Berlin.)

Spellman reiterated his previous statement that "everything I have ever discussed with Cardinal Mindszenty has been for the spiritual welfare and physical well being of his being."

"As a true, God-loving American," Spellman said "I believe in freedom not for Americans alone, but for all peoples upon the face of the earth; and, as long as there is breath in my body, I shall cry out against Communist dictatorship and the enslavement and imprisonment of helpless persecuted people . . ."

Greeks Add New Party To Cabinet

Athens, Greece, Jan. 8 (AP).—The Greek government, on American recommendation, decided today to take another party into the cabinet to gain strength in Parliament.

George Papandreou, Social Democrat leader and former Premier, announced he would become minister of war and second vice premier, and that his party will receive three other portfolios.

Premier Themistokles Sophoulis' Liberal-Populist coalition government was nearly toppled six weeks ago, receiving a vote of confidence with only two votes to spare. The Social Democrats have 30 votes in the chamber of deputies.

The meeting of government leaders at which Papandreou was appointed also discussed a proposal to name a new commander of Greek armed forces. An authoritative source said Gen. Alexander Papagos, commander in chief during the war with Italy, has been offered the post but demanded concessions which the government would not meet.

The police announced recently they had frustrated a Communist plot to assassisate Papandreou.

Cheju Attack Signal Laid to Soviet Subs

Seoul, Korea, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—The emergency guard's tactics chief, Choi Chi Whan, said today that three Russian submarines surfaced off South Korea four days ago and signaled Communist guerillas to launch an attack on the provisional capital of Cheju.

Choi claimed the Soviet subs surfaced off Cheju Island on January 4. They signaled to 200 Red rebels there, who immediately attacked the city, causing numerous deaths and extensive damage, he said. This is the first report of trouble on the island.

The emergency guard, part of the home ministry, received a message from police headquarters in Cheju Thursday reporting 56 police and civilians were killed in the Communist assault. More than 50 buildings were said to have been burned, including the provisional capitol and police headquarters.

There was no report of Communist casualties.

Choi said two submarines appeared off the town of Samyang in the afternoon and one off Hanrinri at night. He said Cheju police reported that the Soviet flag was clearly visible from shore.

He said the subs off Samyang signaled with lights, but did not fire and made no attempt to land supplies to the estimated 1000 guerillas dug in with artillery and machine guns in the island's mountainous interior.

The subs remained surfaced off Samyang for four hours, despite intense rifle fire from police along the beach, he said. He added the sub off Hanrinri did not leave until the following morning.

Cheju Island is 70 miles south of the Korean mainland. It is 45 miles long and 20 miles wide.

Envoy Says U. N. Saved Korea From Communists

By the United Press

Korea's new ambassador to the United States yesterday said the United Nations had saved his country from Communist domination.

Dr. John Myun Chang said the U. N. General Assembly's overwhelming recognition of the Korean republic as the legal government for Korea forestalled a Soviet-backed plan to seize the country.

Chang, 49, was educated at Venard Preparatory College Scranton, Pa., and Manhattan College, New York. He fled his country in 1919 to escape the Japanese terror, and did not return to his homeland until 1926.

In the midst of intense diplomatic activities, field dispatches said the Reds had opened attacks along the Hwai River line, the thinly manned government defenses 100 miles north of Nanking.

It was the first attack on the Hwai since the big Red push southward turned last month and began the annihilation of two government forces between the river and Suchow 90 miles north.

Artillery Fire Heard

Dispatches to the Chinese press reported artillery fire could be heard again in Pengpu, anchor for the line 108 miles northwest of Nanking.

This attack was coupled with heavy assaults on the former Suchow garrison, which still holds possibly 150,000 government soldiers. This force has been encircled for weeks.

Pro-government reports said today the Communists had penetrated into several points well within the city limits of besieged Tientsin.

Fighting was reported less than half a mile from Kiessling's famed confectionery-restaurant. The Reds also were reported to have penetrated to a point between the city's east and central stations.

Headquarters of Gen. Fu Tso-yi, the government's north China commander, reported the Reds Friday attacked Tientsin from the east, west and south, throwing more than one column into each sector. A Red column averages 15,000 men.

U. S. Officials Concerned Over Israel Incident

By The Associated Press

American officials expressed deep concern yesterday over the shooting down of British fighter planes in the Palestine area.

They expressed hope, however, that a general acceptance of the United Nations cease-fire order for Palestine fighting would prevent a more serious involvement of the British with the Jews.

First reaction from official informants here was that the incident would infuriate the British government and arose a new wave of anti-Israel feeling among the British people but that the British would "not go to war" about it.

5 RAF Planes Are Shot Down

15 miles west of Rafa, the border point.

A few hours later another reconnaissance force was sent to see what had happened to the Spitfires. It "was also attacked by Jewish aircraft" and one Tempest is missing.

This differed in most details with the account of the Jewish spokesman in Tel Aviv.

He said one of the pilots bailed out, was captured and proved to be an officer of the RAF. The burned body of another pilot was found in the ruins of an RAF Spitfire, he added.

[Later another pilot was captured and a fourth picked up by Arabs in Egypt, the United Press reported.]

The Jewish spokesman said three of the planes were shot down by Israeli fighters yesterday morning before the 2 p. m. cease-fire went into effect with Egypt. The other two were shot down in the afternoon.

The encounters took place, the spokesman declared, after "enemy aircraft" had strafed Jewish forces.

The captured flier was identified as flying officer Timothy John McElhaw, 22 of the RAF's Reconnaissance Squadron No. 208. McElhaw was said by the Jews to have given this account:

He and Fying Officers Cooper, Cook and Close were instructed to make an armed aerial reconnaissance of Israeli and Egyptian positions along the border, from RAFA at the coast, to Auja, about 30 miles inland. The mission took off with a camera in the lead plane, and all guns loaded. He saw Cooper's plane shot down and he himself bailed out without firing his guns when his plane was hit by fire from Israeli fighters.

Later, the spokesman said, a formation of 12 planes carrying wing bombs was seen northeast of Rafa (in Palestine territory) and was attacked by Israeli fighters and antiaircraft guns. One crashed in flames and another was claimed by Israeli pilots as shot down. It was in one of these planes that the charred body of the British pilot was found.

The Israeli government said it was communicating its version of the incident to the United Nations immediately.

Rafa, in the area of the clash, is a disputed town. An Israeli spokesman said yesterday Rafa had been in Palestine territory until the end of the British mandate, when the British moved the border north to include it in Egypt.

The British Air Ministry said that "in view of these unprovoked attacks our aircraft have been instructed to regard as hostile any Jewish aircraft encountered over Egyptian territory."

Britain has a 1936 treaty of defense with Egypt and is holding her air bases in the canal zone under that treaty. The zone, vital to empire communications, is only about 90 miles from the big Egyptian base of El Arish, 30 miles from the Palestine border.

The Jews have announced officially that they chased the Egyptians as far as El Arish a few days ago, but withdrew into Palestine. However, they have admitted that a few Jewish troops may still be on the Egyptian side where they are maintaining a half-ring around the coastal border town of Rafa.

Troops to 'Aid Ally'

There was no indication Britain would resort to force inside the Jewish state in retaliation. But the British Foreign Office said it reserved the right to demand compensation and to take "all possible further action."

Although linked with the general tension of the announcement that British Tommies are moving into Akaba a spokesman said it was only "natural" that Trans-Jordan should ask for military aid and that Britain should furnish it to an ally.

[Cairo reports to the United Press said British infantry, armored cars, tanks and aircraft arrived at Akaba three weeks ago. Ground forces were transported aboard a British sloop, a cruiser and two destroyers. Additional ground forces and supplies have been landed since then, Cairo said.]

The British spokesman denied published reports that detachments also have been sent to the Egyptian border area.

At Cairo, Egypt confirmed today that she has agreed to negotiate with Israel for a Palestine armistice.

The official Egyptian confirmation (two days after it had been announced by the U. N. mediator in New York) marked a departure from Arab policy dating back to 1939 of holding no direct talks with Zionists. It was accompanied by some Egyptian recriminations aimed at some of their Arab allies for failure to come to Egypt's aid.

British Policy in Dutch Strife Feared by Far East Officials

(From Press Dispatches)

London, Jan. 8.—British Dominion high commissioners for Australia, New Zealand, India, Pakistan and Ceylon called on Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin today to advise him that Britain's hands-off policy in the Dutch-Indonesian strife may play into Communist hands.

Foreign Office spokesmen officially refused comment, but informed government sources said the commissioners are worried over the effect Britain's failure to condemn the Dutch will have on the restive populations of the Far East.

India, strongly pro-Indonesian, is particularly irritated.

The Indonesians will continue guerilla warfare and a scorched earth policy in their fight for independence, Dr. Soemitro, chief Indonesian delegate to the United Nations, said at Karachi, Pakistan, today.

Soemitro, en route to New Delhi to attend the Asian conference opening January 20, expressed little faith in Dutch assurances that plans for Indonesian self-rule were being prepared.

He said the United States and the other great powers now bear a heavy responsibility for what is happening in Asia.

At Batavia, Java, Dutch officials made public letters which they said were from three top Republican leaders including President Soekarno, expressing gratitude for the treatment given them during their internment.

The letters, written in Berastaki in northern Sumatra, were signed by Soekarno, former Premier Sutan Sjahrir and Foreign Minister Hadji Agus Salim.

Premier Mohamed Hatta's name was absent.

Luciano Denies Drug Charge

Rome, Jan. 8 (AP). — Charles (Lucky) Luciano, former New York underworld character, angrily denied tonight charges that he is involved in illicit shipment of drugs to the United States.

"I'm living clean and proper over here. I got nothing to hide," he declared.

Customs officials in New York said yesterday they have "positive information that Luciano is involved in all illegal transfers of narcotics from Italy and other Mediterranean countries to this country in recent years."

The 51-year-old, Sicilian-born Luciano was deported from the United States to Italy in February, 1946, after serving a jail term for white slavery, narcotics peddling and other crimes.

[In New York a Wall Street importer with a Park Avenue address was arrested for possessing $80,000 worth of pure cocaine and narcotic agents reported the importer. Ralph Jimenez, 46, was the "biggest smuggler of cocaine in the Western Hemisphere" and a longtime associate of Luciano.]

New Storm Hits Western States

Denver, Jan. 8 (AP).—A new storm, hard on the heels of the week's earlier blizzard, swept down across Montana into Wyoming today and was expected in Colorado by night.

Weather observers sounded warnings to travelers, stockmen and other residents of a four-State area.

The new storm covered Montana by morning and crept across Wyoming toward northeastern Colorado and the western sections of Nebraska and Kansas. It was expected to spread south all the way to northern New Mexico during the night.

Two to three inches of new snow, driven by winds of from 25 to 35 miles an hour, were piled atop the mountainous drifts of the earlier blizzard in the first few hours of the new onslaught.

Weather forecasters said the weekend storm probably would continue with snow and high winds through Sunday and part of Monday. Monday night, they said, the violence of the storm should diminish but would be followed by extremely low temperatures.

The region was attempting to shake off the near paralysis it suffered for four days when the previous blizzard halted rail, air and highway travel and claimed a total of 18 lives in a four-State area.

Main highways were open again but officials feared the new storm might seal the roads again during the night. Rail travel was proceeding East and West.

New Cold Wave Threatens Southern California

Los Angeles, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—A new cold wave today threatened southern California, where million-dollar crops were half ruined by a record-breaking freeze earlier in the week.

Forecaster E. C. Counts at San Francisco said the cold air front was even colder than last week.

Some growers fired smudge pots last night to try to save what was left of their crops. Temperatures were as low as 25 in some sections of the orange belt. The new cold wave was expected Sunday.

Loss from this week's three-day freeze has been estimated at 60 million dollars.

Plows Reach 2 Snowbound S. Dak. Towns

Rapid City, S. Dak., Jan. 8 (AP).—Snowplows today freed the second large party marooned in western South Dakota for five days by blizzards.

Some 400 motorists were liberated at the town of Wall. Bulldozers moved beyond Wall to open Highway 16 for East-West travel across the State.

Wall is 60 miles east of Rapid City. Its normal population is 700.

Before getting to Wall, snowplows smashed through the high drifts to rescue 71 motorists snowbound since Sunday in a community whose normal population is 13.

The first-freed travelers, in 28 autos, were caught by the blizzard at Wicksville, 33 miles east of here on U. S. Highway 14-16. They were put up in two houses and two gasoline filling stations, the town's sole buildings.

A college student, Robert Mlady, said there was "a mad rush" to leave Wall by the 385 men, women and children who had been caught there by the storm. Mlady said his party was caught by the full force of the blizzard 10 miles east of Wall. "The car crawled into Wall," Mlady said.

Townspeople opened their homes but by late Sunday night people were sleeping in cafe booths, on top of bars and stretched out on the floor of stores.

Food held up "pretty good," Mlady said. Milk and bread began to run out the last day.

Mlady and his group wore out four decks of cards. A small dance was organized Thursday.

At Wicksville, women baked bread and rolls as an adequate food supply was maintained.

Dr. N. E. Olson, Rapid City, said: "We slept where we would not get stepped on, played every kind of card game imaginable and walked back and forth between the other two buildings, looking for a little excitement."

Farewell Tribute Paid Capper by Fellow Kansans

The entire Kansas congressional delegation said farewell yesterday to Arthur Capper, 83-year-old Topeka publisher, at a breakfast given by Representative Hope (R., Kans.).

Members of the delegation paid tribute to the veteran politician who has retired from the Senate after 30 years' service and who will leave for Topeka January 12.

Hope told Capper he knew of no man in Kansas who has had as distinguished a career as the former Governor and Senator. There is little likelihood, he added, that any Kansan ever will exceed Capper's long service.

Senator Schoeppel (R., Kans.), who succeeded Capper, declared the Topeka publisher is "in the position of a man revered and respected not only in Kansas but throughout the United States.

"You have left a big pair of shoes for me to try to fill," he said.

Hawaiian Volcano in Eruption . . .

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

MAUNA LOA SPEWING LAVA—Smoke and lava pour from the fissures in the crater of Mauna Loa, erupting for the first time since 1942. The fiery river of molten rock, appeared last night to have halted its surge toward the Kona coast, according to reports from Honolulu, and villagers cautiously began returning to their homes. Aerial observers said the flow of lava, after spewing 20 miles down the mountain side, was slowed to a standstill 6 miles short of a cluster of villages and plantations along the west coast of the Island of Hawaii

Sharp Earthquake Jars Hawaii; Heavy Downpour Floods Areas

Hilo, Hawaii, Jan. 8 (AP).—A sharp earthquake jarred the island of Hawaii today and downpours of more than a foot of rain in 24 hours flooded some districts at the base of erupting Mauna Loa.

There was no report of damage from the quake. The downpours disrupted communications to Hawaii's interior and prevented detailed reports of flood damage.

The Weather Bureau recorded 9.94 inches of rainfall in the past 24 hours at the Hilo Airport, 34 miles northeast of the smoking volcano. There were heavier downpours nearer Mauna Loa.

Latest reports from the district around the 13,680-foot volcano said there had been no damage to villages and crops from the lava flow. The lava was slowing considerably as it moved down the western slope. Lava still was erupting from the crater.

The Coast Guard said there still was no trace of a light plane which vanished yesterday near Mauna Loa on a sightseeing flight.

The Hawaii Aeronautics Commission reported three men were aboard: Pilot James Redmon, Frank Lee, a Honolulu businessman, and William A. Simpson, Pearl Harbor Navy Yard worker.

The seismograph recorded the shock at about 1 a. m. Honolulu time (6 a. m. E. S. T.).

Finns Accused Of Two-Faced Policy in Article

Moscow, Jan. 8 (AP).—The Literary Gazette accused the Finnish government today of being two-faced to Russia.

The article said a recent propaganda book on Finland was printed in Russian, English and other languages. The Russian edition varied from the others, it added.

The Gazette said the first page of the Russian edition declared Finland is "striving for friendship with all peace-loving peoples." The article said the statement is missing entirely from the English edition. Another statement in the Russian edition said "the Soviet Union was the first government to recognize Finland," but this was declared lacking in other editions. At another place the Russian edition mentions Russian "generosity" in canceling some Finnish reparations. This was dropped from other editions, the Gazette said.

"The deceivers from Helsinki (the Finnish capital) are conducting a two-faced policy," the angry article said. "It is clear that . . . the 'smiling face' turned in the direction of the U. S. S R. is only a mask."

2 Million See Mummers' Fun

Philadelphia, Jan. 8 (AP).—King Momus had to wait an extra week to strut in the New Year, but he outdid himself today with the biggest, most lavish Mummers Parade of them all.

Guy E. Parsons, assistant superintendent of police, estimated that two million persons jammed sidewalks to view the glittering procession of the 18,000 funmakers.

The parade was scheduled traditionally for New Year's Day, but snow prompted postponement.

Bill to Extend Rent Control to July '51 Ready

By the United Press

The Administration will put before Congress a bill to tighten up rent control and extend it for 27 months, it was disclosed last night.

The measure, giving the rent director power to bring new areas under control if defense spending makes it necessary, has been sent to the Capitol and will be introduced, probably this week, by Administration supporters.

The bill generally is expected to get a favorable reception from the Democratic Congress, but some of its features—such as the long period of extension—are certain to run into a fight.

Strong new safeguards would be thrown around rights of tenants. Landlords convicted of overcharges could be jailed and fined as much as $5000.

Power to control evictions—denied to the rent boss under the present law—would be restored to him. So would authority to sue for heavy damages from landlords who flout the law.

Provision for "voluntary leases" increasing rents up to 15 per cent—a provision once denounced strongly by President Truman—would be abolished. However, existing leases would not be upset.

Appeal rights would be extended. In some cases appeals could go as high as the Supreme Court. And tenants, under some circumstances, as well as landlords, could appeal the rent director's decisions.

The bill also would restore controls on transient hotel accommodations, motor courts and tourist homes.

The present rent control law expires March 31. The bill would continue it through June 30, 1951. Controls have been continued only a year at a time for the past two years.

Southerners Regroup After House Defeats

By the United Press

Southern Democrats, already defeated on two test votes, were trying yesterday to regroup their forces in the House to fight the Administration's program.

Representative E. E. Cox (D., Ga.), long a commanding figure in the Southern bloc, said the "real test" would come on two issues, President Truman's civil rights program and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

He conceded that many Southerners deserted to the Administration's side on early test votes.

"But on the issues of the civil rights program and repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, I do not believe there will be many defections," Cox said.

Other Southern leaders, who asked that their names be withheld, were less confident. They admitted that they do not know how many votes they can command on a real showdown.

The Administration has already scored two decisive victories in early tests. They involved moves to crack the power of the House Rules Committee and to oust Repreesntative John T. Rankin (D., Miss.) from the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Brannan Cites Abundance As Core of Farm Policy

Springfield, Mo., Jan. 8 (AP).—Agriculture Secretary Charles F. Brannan said tonight the Government's agriculture policy "must continue to revolve around abundance—organized, sustained and realistic abundance."

Brannan spoke at a Jefferson-Jackson Democratic victory banquet.

The Secretary promised revival of the storage program on Government-loan grain. But, he said, the Government should not "go into the grain storage business in a big way."

"We want a storage program operated as much as possible by farmers themselves," he said.

Brannan praised President Truman as being a closer "counterpart" of Andrew Jackson in his identity with the people than any other Democratic President.

Seminar Subject, the Federal Budget . . .

Officials Study New Plan for Price Supports, Crop Storage

the customs duties set aside to support domestic agricultural markets—plus some Commodity Credit monies. These purchases were limited, however, to amounts that could be readily used for "direct distribution" through school lunches and to Federal and State institutions and private charities.

Direct Distribution

In a few cases, some processed products, such as tomato juice, canned tomatoes, peas, etc., and canned citrus juices, have been bought for similar "direct distribution." Also a year ago the then Agriculture Secretary Clinton P. Anderson bought surplus dried fruits that were choking the market. Most of these later were shipped abroad, or sold to the armed forces.

Officials are seeking a support plan to apply to perishable crops. So far none that will completely fill the bill has been found. They admit strict crop quotas and controls will be necessary. Such controls are hazardous, especially for vegetables and fruits, where yields are so responsive to weather changes that raising such products is more a gamble than a business.

Title II of the Agricultural Act of 1948, known as the Aiken portion of the Hope Aiken farm bill, provides one way to support prices of perishable crops that didn't exist in earlier laws. Until next January 1, the methods of price supports under the present law consist of loans and purchases. After January 1, 1950, payments and indirect operations "such as improved merchandising practice" are permitted. In other words, after next January, a method of subsidy to reimburse the farmer for the difference between what his product brings on the market and the support level will be permitted.

In this respect, it is interesting to note that the department is considering a study of methods to expand the domestic markets for agricultural products, particularly among low-income groups. Such a study was recommended by President Truman in his recent State of the Union message.

Recently, all departments were asked to forward to the Director of the Budget recommendations for legislation for Congress. Among those forwarded from the Agriculture Department was a suggestion for renewed study of the Food Stamp Plan, used in the late 1930s to increase distribution of foodstuffs—fruits, vegetables, etc.—among low-income groups.

In this respect, the President's Board of Economic Advisers, in its annual report Friday, remarked:

"If price supports are to fulfill their proper role of encouraging the adjustment of farm production to our needs, they also should be supplemented by measures to assure consumption at the needed levels.

Wider Measures

"This implies examination of the adequacy of the school lunch program and development of measures wider in scope for assuring that proper diets will be continuously available to all our people."

In his State of the Union message, President Truman urged that "our goals should be abundant farm production and parity of income for agriculture." Certain of his agricultural advisers take that to mean also "parity of income" within agriculture. That is not achieved with only part of the crops supported, they assert.

The grain storage program under consideration is as widely different from the one existing at present, or that existed before the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation was rewritten, as is the new price support program different from the present one.

One of the big issues in the recent campaign was Government grain storage. Democrats charged the Republican Eightieth Congress had taken away the right from CCC to own or lease storage facilities. Without such facilities the price support program was endangered, as price support loans are made on grain "in adequate storage."

Storage By Co-ops

Under consideration is a program that would do away with all, or most, of Government grain storage. In its place is a plan whereby farmer cooperatives would take over storage—with Government aid in loans or some other method of financing.

The plan contemplates three types of storage:

1. Storage on the farm in Government-approved bins or cribs.

2. Subterminal storage—in other words, country elevators. Many of these are now operated cooperatively. These would be particularly pushed for corn storage. Most corn is fed to livestock within a few miles of where it is raised. Increased country elevator storage would retain that corn nearer to its place of consumption.

3. Terminal storage. Increased storage facilities at terminals will be needed to take care of the carryover—or "stockpile," as some now choose to call it—of grain. Government experts are raising their sights on what the carryover should be. A "grain bank" of around a billion bushels is the most common suggestion heard at present.

Carryover of Great Value

The huge carryover this country had at the beginning of the war was of inestimable value to ourselves and our allies. Government officials want to build up and actually increase the stockpile, which has been exhausted for three years.

Before World War II, most of our huge carryover was concentrated in four large terminals. The present Government program would be to spread that out and build new terminal facilities in other places. Officials don't want too much of our supplies in a few places and thus subject to destruction in case of another war. More terminal cities, plus increased subterminal storage, they think, would be a defense measure equal to the stockpile itself.

year; public housing, 500 million dollars annually; Federal aid to education, 300 million dollars a year to start; universal military training from two billion to four billion dollars a year, and compulsory health insurance and other social welfare programs, six billion dollars annually.

Those items add up to more than 15 billion dollars. Halleck said, however, that not all of them could be accomplished in one year, so he pared down the total to 12 billion dollars additional.

"The American people should take a hard look at what he can expect in the way of Government revenues, and more importantly at the price tags which must be attached to all of these new proposals and their feasibility in our form of government and economy," Halleck said.

"No one, and certainly not the President of the United States, should indulge in reckless promises which cannot be fulfilled without inviting bankruptcy and which, entirely aside from the cost in dollars, might work irreparable harm to our great system of productive, competitive enterprise."

Wilson Room Is Dedicated At Library

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

The Woodrow Wilson Room, housing the personal library of the World War I President, was dedicated at the Library of Congress yesterday.

In her brief, formal presentation of the books and memorabilia of the President, who died in 1924, Mrs. Wilson said she was happy to have the Library of Congress have them as "I feel confident that this library represents the source from which he drew much of the courage and inspiration which he gave to the world in such large measure."

Mrs. Wilson's presentation of the library, and its acceptance by Librarian of Congress Luther Evans, followed an address by Dr. Francis Pendleton Gaines, president of Washington and Lee University, who said the library was "the revelation of Woodrow Wilson on the way to greatness."

80 Guests Present

About 80 guests were present for the dedication, held outside the entrance to the walnut-paneled room, which is now open to visitors.

Dr. Gaines, a lifelong friend of Mrs. Wilson, paid tribute to the late President as an educator and statesman, as one who "was both a thinker and a doer, the student of political procedure and the master of events."

President Wilson was, he said, "a man whose choice of books, whose annotation of books, whose treasures of books, were the constant reflection of the development of a great purpose within his own heart.

"This room will be of pride to Americans as long as we cherish our annals and the ones who made these annals a thing of glory," he said.

Dr. Evans described the room as "a memorial to the character and ideals of President Wilson.

"In designing this room," he said, "we have tried to create a setting which he himself would have liked, a place of study where he might have felt at ease with the books that gave nourishment to his mind."

Noting that Mrs. Wilson had given the library the personal papers of her late husband 10 years ago, Dr. Evans said that "with the gift of his personal library of some 9000 books and documents, medals and memorabilia that represent honors conferred upon him, there is now centered in the library's two buildings a comprehensive body of record such as exists for few Presidents of the United States.

"Through Mrs. Wilson's public-spirited acts, scholars of the present and future generations have been given a means of understanding and interpreting Woodrow Wilson and his times."

Among those present for the dedication were: Harold Willis Dodds, president of Princeton University, of which President Wilson was once head, and Mrs. Dodds; Arthur Sweetser, president of the Woodrow Wilson Foundation, and Mrs. Sweetser; Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of The Washington Post and managing director of the War Finance Corp. in the Wilson Administration, and Mrs. Meyer; Houston Thompson, Assistant Attorney General in the Wilson Administration, and Mrs. Thompson; Charles Warren, also an Assistant Attorney General in the Administration; United States Attorney General Tom C. Clark, Representative C. W. Bishop of Illinois and Senator Theodore Green of Rhode Island, members of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Me.) and Andrew F. Schoeppel (R., Kan.).

Senator Robert C. Hendrickson (R., N. J.), said, however, that he believes local residents should be permitted to vote at least in presidential elections.

Schoeppel said he thought the home rule idea of an elected city council "offers some advantages over the present method." Senators Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.), commented that he had "an open mind" on the suffrage question.

Sales Tax Outlook

Outlook for enactment of a District sales tax in the present Congress depends upon the selling job the Commissioners are able to put across to the Senate District Committee, the survey revealed.

While only two legislators, Senators Johnston and Neely, have expressed outright opposition to the sales levy, six members indicated privately that they might go along with it if convinced it was the only possible means of keeping the District solvent.

Schoeppel, though taking no firm position, said he administered a State sales tax as Governor of Kansas, and "I do see the benefits of it." Senators Smith, Mundt and Hendrickson withheld comment.

McGrath said he first wanted to "get a briefing" on the city's financial situation. He favored the sales levy last year, though it died in the Senate after making the House hurdle.

Chances of District employes receiving the same $330 salary increase given Federal workers appear favorable if the District Committee has its say. Seven members on both sides of the aisle gave the District pay boost their "enthusiastic" blessing.

The other legislators were silent on the issue, either because they were not talking about anything for the present, or had not been notified officially of their committee appointments.

Senator J. Allan Frear (D., Del.) and Bert H. Miller (D., Idaho) have declined to comment on any issues.

Senator Williams, who reportedly will serve on the District Committee, made his first foray into politics when he was elected to the United States Senate in the 1946 Republican sweep. The 42-year-old legislator has been a poultryman and merchant all his life. His committees in the Eightieth Congress were Civil Service and Public Works.

Wed, Then Hug Children

Versailles, France, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—Louise Dore and Juan Leal were married in the town hall today. After the ceremony, the couple walked to a clinic and gave each of four children a big hug. The children, Jean, Robert, Renee and Jacqueline, are quadruplets born to the couple September 5.

Slum Clearing Fund Lack Hit

legislation included the first Federal recognition of the principle of Government aid for slum clearance.

"This principle has since been adopted by a number of States, but the Congress certainly is not setting a good example when it ignores its own pioneering enactment in this field, and in effect renders that enactment void by refusing to appropriate funds to make the act operative," said the Senator.

Suggests Larger Amount

Referring to the $3,400,000 figure asked by the land agency for the coming year, McCarran said he thought it "may be a mistake" to ask for such a small amount that the request will be associated in the public mind with certain controversial slum clearance projects.

The initial request should be considered, McCarran added, as the "first step in a broad slum clearance program for the entire District of Columbia, which it most certainly is."

The legislator emphasized that he was not criticizing Landsburgh for asking for his stated sum. "The land agency has undoubtedly asked for as much money as it thinks it can justify and for which it believes it can secure budget approval," the Senator commented.

It remains for Congress, he said, to determine whether it is wiser to grant a larger sum than the three million figure as its first appropriation.

Last week Landsburgh filed a formal report with the Senate requesting that a portion of the fiscal year 1950 appropriation be made available in the present fiscal year to start work in the Marshall Heights section. The area is bounded by Benning rd. ne., East Capitol st. and the District line.

The agency report had pointed out that lack of funds for the 2-year-old program had prevented it from accomplishing any of the "plans or obligations imposed upon it by the Act of Congress."

Federal Pay Inequity Shown

Mayer of M-G-M and Winthrop Aldrich of Chase National Bank.

But it would be a much smaller degree, as the postal service is so much larger than any private business and the responsibility on the Postmaster General is so much greater. The Post Office Department is the largest single and the most extensive business in the world, which took in $1,700,000,000 last year.

It's also the largest single employer, savings bank, real estate owner and renter, etc.

Executives of private business a fraction the size of the postal service are paid many times more than Donaldson's $15,000 a year. And that isn't a net figure for the Postmaster General. His associates in the department estimate he must spend around $2500 a year out of his salary on legitimate expenses of his office such as travel, etc.

Business long ago learned it was good business to pay its executives good salaries. The biggest business of them all—the Government—has yet to learn the lesson.

It is no exaggeration to say that Donaldson daily must make decisions involving millions of the public's dollars, but when it comes to his personal finances he must concern himself with dollars and cents. The Cabinet member is frank to say that he must use care to stretch his salary check to cover the needs of his family and to do the many things his official position requires.

Taken by itself, Donaldson's personal affairs are relatively unimportant. The issues at stake, however, are of vital concern to those of us who want an effective and efficient Government—a Government operated by the best-qualified people.

The President himself is the authority for the thought-provoking statements that the inadequate executive salary scale has "definitely impaired" the Federal service, and that it now constitutes a serious threat to the efficiency of Government. He made the statements in a letter to congressional leaders several days ago appealing for prompt approval for the bill that would raise executive salaries.

As the President also explained in his message, it is most difficult for him to attract and to hold the best qualified people. But this dangerous condition will multiply as time goes on unless Congress acts to correct it. Here's why:

The big group of able career civil servants of which Donaldson is the leader are sticking to their jobs out of intense and stubborn loyalty to their country and their President.

But the potential Donaldsons of 5 and 10 years hence who have been inspired by the recognition of career people to top-rank jobs are becoming discouraged and are dropping out of the Federal service. They wonder if it's worth the effort unless some measure of financial security goes with it.

Malone to Seek U. S. Showdown on Far East Policy

Senator George W. Malone (R., Nev.) said last night he will demand on the Senate floor that the Administration define its policy toward the Far East.

He charged in a statement that lack of a clear-cut policy is turning all Asia against the United States. He said it is resulting in abandonment of China to Communists and setting Indonesia on the road to communism.

Malone, who recently returned from a Far Eastern tour, said "the United States must make up its mind whether the integrity of the Chinese government is important to our ultimate safety."

He said that in his opinion, "psychologically and economically, the Far East is much more important to us than Europe." But, he said, only the military authorities can determine whether it is as important militarily.

Girl Sets U. S. Altitude Record For Small Planes

Miami, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP).—Betty Skelton, 22-year-old Tampa, Fla., pilot, today set an unofficial national altitude record for light aircraft by climbing to 25,760 feet in a Piper PA-11 aircraft.

The previous record of 24,400 feet was set before the war.

Miss Skelton's flight highlighted the second day of the seventeenth annual Miami All American air maneuvers.

Miss Skelton said she ran out of oxygen. It was 12 degrees below zero, she said. "I'm going to try to break the international record of 26,000 feet," she added.

Earlier, Steve Wittman and Bill Brennand moved into the finals of the $10,000 Continental trophy race for midget planes.

Holdup Man Killed In Battle on Bus

Indianapolis, Jan. 8 (AP).—A gun battle through the window of a crowded bus ended today in the death of a holdup man.

None of the 41 bus passengers, who cringed in terror on the floor, was hurt seriously.

A poultry store operator, who seized his shotgun and gave chase after the man had robbed a neighboring store, was the winner in the gun fight.

Orville G. Barnes, a grocer, ran into Kenneth Smiser's shop and told of being robbed at gunpoint of between $75 and $100.

Smiser and his father, Fletcher, began the chase after getting a shotgun from their nearby home.

Finding no trace of the fugitive, the Smisers asked Robert Koss, who thought the man might have caught a bus, to chase the bus, which was forced to the curb.

The Smisers asked the bus driver, Harold E. Curry, if a man had boarded the bus a few blocks back, and the fugitive started shooting.

Amid the screams of the passengers who had ducked to the floor after the first glass-shattering shot, the man and Smiser exchanged shots.

The fugitive then ran out of the bus and after more shooting collapsed on a nearby lawn. He made one last effort to pick up his revolver before he died, but Smiser kicked it out of reach.

At least two passengers suffered minor injuries. Police said two shotgun pellets struck one man in the leg and a woman was cut by flying glass.

The holdup man was not positively identified.

Former Boxer

Gus Dorazio Charged in Fatal Beating

Philadelphia, Jan. 8 (AP).—A former heavyweight boxer who said he was tired of being taunted and called "punch drunk" was accused today of beating a fellow brewery employe to death.

Gus Dorazio, a leading challenger for the heavyweight crown eight years ago, was arraigned and held without bail in connection with the slaying of 33-year-old Albert Blomeyer.

Arrested shortly after Blomeyer died yesterday, Dorazio was quoted by detectives as saying:

"People have been taunting me. They called me punch drunk. They'd call me up on the phone just to heckle me."

Unshaven and wearing a blue jacket and overalls, the silent Dorazio was arraigned before Magistrate George Levin who said:

"This is a bad ending for a fellow like you."

Dorazio fought Champion Joe Louis in Philadelphia, February 17, 1941, and was knocked out in the second round. He came back later to whip Joe Baski, a current title contender.

He has fought little since serving a year in 1946 in Federal prison as a World War II draft dodger.

Detective James Martin said Alosi Witt, 37, told police he, Blomeyer and another man left a tavern near the Schmidt Brewery yesterday afternoon. They noticed Dorazio following them.

The third man boarded a trolley. Dorazio chased Witt and Blomeyer into the brewery and the trio began fighting.

Witt and Blomeyer were taken to St. Mary's Hospital, where they were treated. Five hours later Blomeyer collapsed in his home.

Police said Dorazio did not attribute the "punch drunk" taunts to the assault victims.

Detective Martin Curran of the homicide squad testified a labor dispute was involved. He said a fight had been going on for some time for control of the two unions at the plant.

Curran said Blomeyer and Witt were shop stewards for the CIO Brewery Workers Union and had received recently union instructions to obtain employe signatures on a petition asking for a union shop election.

Detectives said Dorazio made a statement and later refused to sign it. In the statement, they said Dorazio related that the men "ganged up on him" in the union fuss and that he then struck back at them.

Magnuson Due Soon; Romance Discounted

Office aides of dapper Senator Warren G. Magnuson (D., Wash.) said yesterday he would resume his official duties here "early next week."

They added an opinion that it was "car trouble" and storms, rather than romance with a pretty blonde film actress, that caused him to miss the first week of the new session.

Some friends here have linked the Senator's week-long absence to his friendship with June Millarde, reputed heiress who is known in Holywood as Toni Seven.

Track Repairs On W. & O. D. to Be Finished Today

Traffic should begin moving today over a caved-in section of the Washington & Old Dominion Railroad tracks, T. C. Dorsey, superintendent, said yesterday.

Roughly 200 feet of track in the 1500 block of Lee Highway collapsed when a section of the supporting fill caved in Friday, forcing passenger and freight trains to unload an eighth of a mile from the Rosslyn terminal.

Dorsey said the roadbed supporting the remaining track would be shored up with pile-driven steel rails, reinforced with timbers, permitting trains to pass safely.

'Moderation' Policy Advocated By Sen. Margaret Chase Smith

Senator Margaret Chase Smith (R., Me.), only feminine member of the Senate, last night urged a policy of "moderation" for the Nation, and predicted that the party adopting such a policy could achieve overwhelming victory.

Speaking at a dinner sponsored by the Women's National Press Club honoring distaff members of Congress at the Mayflower, Senator Smith declared:

"Beyond question the election strongly indicated that the mood of Americans, that is the 55 per cent who made the effort to vote, is definitely pro-liberal. But this doesn't justify granting special privilege to particular groups any more than it means that Americans are in favor of public spending to the point of insolvency . . ."

The speaker declared, "I like to think of myself as a Moderate. The question is what is a Moderate? The best answer I have is one who does not go to either extreme, one who adopts and supports what he or she conceives to be the good of both sides—one who takes something from the Liberal viewpoint and something from the Conservative viewpoint . . . I conceive a Moderate to be one who is somewhat more Liberal, and somewhat less Conservative, than one in the past category of "middle-of-the road."

But, the speakers cautioned, "unabated compromise" must also be rejected.

Commenting on her support of Senator Robert Taft (R., Ohio), for chairman of the Senate Republican Committee, Senator Smith asserted she voted for Taft "because I knew he had sponsored certain liberal legislation in the past and would in the future . . . Those opposing him did not offer any positive substitutes—only negative proposals."

Mrs. Smith said the Republicans lost five straight presidential elections because too many party leaders throughout the Government should not intervene in economic affairs of the people.

"They have refused to recognize a simple principle of politics," she said. "Nor is this a mere question of expediency, for the little fellow has a right to economic security just as the big man wishes to protect his own interests when he requests legislation beneficial to his business," she asserted.

Among those who heard Senator Smith's address were Senator Kenneth McKellar (D., Tenn.), Senate President protempore; House Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Tex.); House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin, jr. (R., Mass.), Senator Hubert Humphrey (D., Minn.) and Mrs. Humphrey; Senator J. Howard McGrath (D., R. I.) and Mrs. McGrath, Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.) and Mrs. Pepper, the Cuban Ambassador and Senora de Belt and the Philippine Ambassador Joaquin A. Elizalde.

James Appeals Death Sentence For Girl's Death

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 8 (AP).—Eugene H. James, 31-year-old Negro handyman, yesterday appealed his death sentence for the knife killing of a little Baltimore girl.

Attorneys William H. Murphy and Charles Houston filed the case for James in Maryland's Court of Appeals.

Court attaches said the appeal would not be heard until March, unless advanced on the docket.

James was sentenced to be hanged by Judge Herman M. Moser after being convicted of knifing 11-year-old Marsha Brill to death last summer. Marsha was riding her bicycle with two playmates near the Pimlico race track when she was killed.

James also has been indicted in Washington for the similar slaying of Carol Bardwell, also 11, less than two weeks before the Brill girl was killed.

Slayer Faces Assault Trial

Convicted of second-degree murder of Prince Georges County Policeman Charles Caldwell last June 2, Thomas Hall will face trial on a second charge of assault with intent to kill in the county's Circuit Court at Upper Marlboro on Monday at 10 a. m.

Hall, who was sentenced to 18 years in the Caldwell slaying on Thursday, is accused of wounding Policeman Wallace Baker, who was Caldwell's partner on the night of the slaying. According to testimony at Thursday's trial, Caldwell was killed and Baker wounded with Caldwell's own service revolver. The three trial judges ruled that his action was not premeditated.

Also scheduled for hearings on two assault charges Monday is Hall's daughter, Janie, who was acquitted Thursday of a murder charge in the Caldwell slaying. She is accused of participating in the assault on Policeman Baker and also of assaulting another man in the Halls' Deanwood Park home, scene of the affray which resulted in Caldwell's slaying.

Medical Center Plans, Funds Ready

Plans and funds are ready for erection of the new Prince Georges County Medical Center at Cheverly, Md., it was announced last night.

Work on the center, which is planned to have several features unique in this area if not in the country, is expected to start in the spring, Dr. A. Kirk Besley, superintendent, announced.

The present Prince Georges General Hospital Building, now owned by the county, will be expanded with six new wings. Two of the wings will be devoted to Negro patients in surgery, medical obstetrical and pediatric wards, with facilities equal to those planned for the rest of the center, the superintendent revealed. Approximately 44 of the 210 beds in the center will be for Negroes.

New Home for Nurses

A new nurses' home will be built and the present home will be renovated for use as a training school for nurses. A central heating plant will provide service for all of the buildings.

Tied in with the center will be a modern home for the county health department, with facilities for administrative, clinic and laboratory work, Dr. Besley said.

The scattered offices of the County Health Department will be centralized in the new building and relieve other county office space for expansion of crowded offices in the courthouse at Upper Marlboro and the County Service Building at Hyattsville.

One of the new wings will be devoted to care of communicable diseases, a service for which there has been great need in the county, which now sends polio cases to Children's Hospital here and other communicable disease cases to Baltimore and Washington hospitals, Dr. Besley explained.

Several New Features

The contagious disease ward will have several new features, one of which is provision for sterilization of all linen used in the ward, which then will permit sending it to the laundry just like other linens. Service dishes will be of paper and an incinerator will be provided to burn the dishes and the remaining food.

An entrance room will be provided in which doctors may disrobe and don surgical gowns to enter the ward and care for their own patients, a feature lacking in most hospitals. Ordinarily the doctor loses contact with his patient after entry into a contagious ward.

Medical and obstetrical wings for white patients also will be provided.

With completion of the Medical Center, steps will be taken to secure recognition as a State-aided hospital so that care of indigent patients may be provided. This will save the conty some $50,000 a year in fees to District and State hospitals, Dr. Besley declared.

Mobile Clinics Planned

A new feature will be mobile clinics operated as a part of the hospital service. Specially trained teams, accompanied by a resident physician, will hold regular clinics in rural areas under direction of the nearest staff doctor. This service is expected to result in early discovery of many diseases which will permit treatment and make unnecessary hospitalization of the patient at a later date.

Construction of the medical center will be realization of a dream which has been conjured by the members of the medical society of the county, hospital officials, the County Commissioners and many lay persons interested in the medical welfare of the county. The late William A. Carson, who was president of the Board of County Commissioners, and Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer, who represents the county in Congress, have taken deep interest in the project and the new president of the board, Harry W. McNamee, has taken up the active direction of the program since the untimely death of Carson.

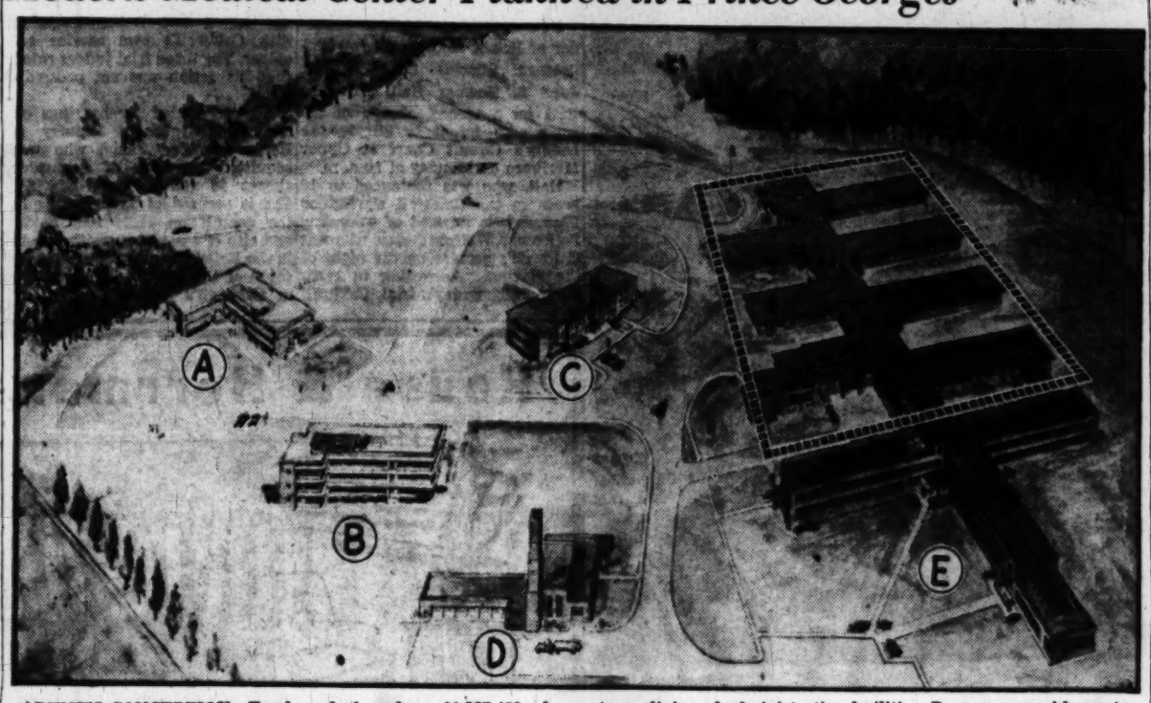
To Cost About $1,287,450

The additional facilities will cost approximately $1,287,450, which $413,650 will be provided from Federal funds under authority of the Hill-Burton Act. The County Commissioners have been authorized to issue bonds totalling $800,000 for the county's share of the project.

The hospital has been self-supporting, with only about 7 per cent of its finances provided by the county in the form of payment for county-aided patients, according to Dr. Besley. This amounts to about $30,000 a year, he said.

The present section of the hospital was constructed in 1942-43 with Federal funds on a country-owned property at a cost of approximately $750,000. Title to the building recently was obtained by the county by payment of $150,000 to the Federal Works Agency. The purchase made possible the preparation for the new structures, since title now is vested in the county.

Modern Medical Center Planned in Prince Georges



ARTIST'S CONCEPTION—Funds and plans for a $1,287,450 addition to the present Prince Georges Hospital at Cheverly, Md., are available and work is expected to begin in the spring. The new hospital center will have 210 beds, with provisions for Negro patients and for communicable disease care for the first time. Plans, prepared by Paul H. Kea Associates of Hyattsville, Md., call for: A—Building for county health department with laboratory, clinic and administrative facilities; B—new nurses' home to replace old home, C—which will be converted to a nurses training school; D—new central heating plant which will heat all of the buildings; E—the enlarged hospital section, with six new wings in the cross-shaped section to be added to the existing building (inside broken lines)

N. D. to Accept DP Doctors

Grand Forks, N. D., Jan. 8 (AP).—North Dakota has opened its doors to a limited number of displaced persons physicians, one of few States to do so.

Dr. O. W. Johnson of Rugby, president of the State Board of Medical Examiners, said the board has agreed to accept up to eight displaced physicians per year for three years under certain conditions.

The physicians must serve a general internship for one year in approved North Dakota hospitals, and then pass an examination for a temporary license.

After they attain full United States citizenship, for which they will be eligible in five years, they will be granted full licenses on review by the medical board.

The temporary licenses will be valid only in the community where the DP doctor is located.

The 24 DP doctors eligible for admission into North Dakota during the next three years, Dr. Johnson said, would compare with approximately 125 American doctors the State board can be expected to license in North Dakota during the same period.

Dr. Johnson said the restrictions will protect North Dakota citizens against unqualified doctors; will give the DP physician a chance to refresh himself on latest United States medical practices; and will give him a period in which to learn the English language and United States customs.

Chemical X Determines Span of Life

By Howard W. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Editor

New York, Jan. 8.—Discovery of a mysterious chemical called X, which seems to time how fast you grow old, was described to the Gerontological Society here today.

X is something that parents transmit to their offspring. It is set, like a clock, either for a long or short life.

The report was by Dr. A. I. Lansing of the Washington University School of Medicine, St. Louis. The Gerontological Society is an organization of scientists and doctors who study old age. Their annual meeting was held today.

The age clock was found in rotifers, but a little human evidence was cited. Rotifers are microscopic water bugs.

The setting of the X-clock in Rotifers depended on how early they mated. Young rotifers lived long if they were born from parents still young. They aged and died more rapidly when parents were older.

By selecting the mating time, Dr. Lansing got rotifers to live four times longer than normal. He continued these long-living animals through 54 generations, which would be nearly 3000 years in human generations. Rotifers live usually only a few days. Those with the X-clock set right lived 100 days and more.

It appears, said Dr. Lansing, that the amount of X stuff in a fertilized egg sets the clock. When there is little X, the rotifer lives long. As parents get older, the eggs contain more X, and life is shorter.

He said that the mysterious stuff also regulates growth. As the volume of X increases, growth stops.

The human evidence is indirect, Dr. Lansing said. A study by Dr. Louis Dublin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., showed a tendency for children of young parents to live longer than those born later.

Discovery two weeks ago of a chemical in heredity that increases susceptibility to cancer, supports the X-clock finding. The cancer discovery was made by Dr. Leonell Strong of Yale University.

Prejail Tests Urged to Screen Mentally Ill

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 8 (AP).—A State commission on crime psychiatry today urged that all convicts be screened for mental ills before being sent to jail.

In a report to Governor Lane, the group called for sweeping changes in the Maryland penal law to give "a flexible approach" to the problem of crime and punishment.

All prisoners should be "processed" at prejail mental laboratories and given "psychiatric appraisal and sociological investigation," it said.

Under this plan, Maryland judges woulud sentence criminals merely to the State Department of Correction, rather than to specific prisons. After screening, the department would then assign the offender to an appropriate jail.

The commission to study medico-legal psychiatry—a group of 15 doctors, judges and legislators headed by John H. Skeen, jr.—was authorized by the 1947 Legislature to draw up a program for the 1949 Legislature.

It urged that a State "medical court service" run by psychiatrists be established to advise judges and trial magistrates on the sentencing of prisoners.

This would "be of inestimable value" in weeding out sex offenders and others "potentially dangerous" who are picked up for minor violations, the commission said.

Smart men as well as dumb ones can be "defective delinquents," the commission said after a two-year study. An intelligent man with an "emotional disorder" needs treatment just as much as a criminal with a subnormal I. Q.

"Excellent instruments for the measurement of emotional inadequacy, stability and maturity" are being developed, the commission said.

It recommended that a new "institution for defective delinquents" be built, estimating that "more than 10 per cent of all those individuals requiring retention are defective delinquents who can only be handled properly in a special institution."

The Skeen commission said it found "a deplorable lack of facilities for psychiatric care" and "a very inadequate organization to cope with the important responsibility of psychological testing and classification" in Maryland prisons.

The State-wide medical court service would help judges get away from "rule-of-thumb" sentencing and "the imposition of penalties prescribed by hidebound statutes," it said.

The service should order mental examinations for all sex offenders and those who show "persistent aggravated antisocial or criminal behavior," it added.

Bills incorporating the commission's reforms are being prepared for introduction by the attorney general.

Arlington Hospital Opens Drive to Obtain $130,000

The Washington Post

LIONS' SHARE—Nurse Marie Parker accepts for Arlington Hospital a $250 check presented by President C. E. Ailstock on behalf of the South Arlington Lions Club. John J. Anderson (right), hospital administrator, witnesses the presentation

Arlington Hospital yesterday opened a drive to raise $130,000—or $1 from every resident in Arlington, Fairfax County and Falls Church.

First contribution in the 1949 campaign was a $250 check from the South Arlington Lions Club, presented to Hospital Administrator John J. Anderson by C. E. Ailstock, club president.

Ailstock said his group plans to work actively to see that the $130,000 goal is met. The hospital itself will contact tri-area residents by personalized letters, asking that a dollar be contributed for every member of the family.

The drive is intended to make up for the failure of last year's campaign, when only $42,480 of an $85,000 goal was reached.

Funds raised this year also will be used for a scheduled $30,000 first payment to the Federal Government for the building which it now owns. Money also is needed to overcome deficits created in giving treatment to indigent patients.

First letters for the campaign will be mailed Monday and daily thereafter, Anderson said.

First Division Society To Meet at Fort Myer

All former First Division men are invited to attend the monthly meeting of the Society of the First Division, Tuesday at 8 p. m. at post headquarters, Fort Myer, Va. Lieut. Col. Donald Curtis, president of the local branch, can be reached for details of the organization at REpublic 6700, extension 2774 during the day.

He is on a Southern tour and did not appear.

"COMMON SENSE....IMAGINATION....AND OUR NEW CARS AT CHRYSLER CORPORATION"

BY K. T. KELLER
PRESIDENT, CHRYSLER CORPORATION

As we see it, we shoulder great responsibility to the public when we introduce new cars.

We try to be the first to see the basic needs of the car buyer . . . and to meet them with imagination in research and engineering, and, at the same time, with common sense.

It began a generation ago when we introduced all-steel car bodies. It continued in 1924 when we pioneered hydraulic four-wheel brakes and the high compression engine. Our basic advances such as Light Weight Pistons in 1929 that made possible the high speed motor . . . sensational Floating Power in 1932 followed by . . . Fluid Drive, safety-rim wheels, super-cushion tires . . . these and many others were great forward steps in automobile safety, comfort and performance.

Our engineers had the creative imagination to develop these advances . . . and the common sense to know that they were needed.

Within the next few weeks, we will introduce still further basic automobile advances in our beautiful new Plymouth, Dodge, De Soto and Chrysler cars.

Again, as in our models past and present, you will find the improvements that are needed, the advances that call for imagination in engineering and research. And you will also find plenty of good common sense, and good taste!

Again, you'll be able to see over the hoods, and out of the rear windows. You'll get in and out with ease. Again there'll be room for your hat. Seats will be wider—yet the cars will fit into your garage. Fender dents won't cost a fortune to fix. You'll be able to change a tire, or put on a set of chains. Again, our cars will be easier to drive and park. They'll start faster, they'll stop more quickly.

They'll have more performance than any cars we ever engineered—and they'll look it.

We're holding on to the good things that built our reputation with you. Again we've built from the inside out—first engineering cars that are safe, comfortable, convenient, and wonderful to drive . . . then creating beauty that reflects the good qualities underneath.

Already materials and parts for our new cars are arriving at our manufacturing plants.

On behalf of the superb team that created our beautiful well-bred new Plymouth, Dodge, De Soto and Chrysler cars, I cordially invite you to see them at your dealers when they are announced.

They're the finest that engineering, imagination and common sense ever built . . . and they look it.

AGAIN YOU GET THE GOOD THINGS FIRST FROM CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Medical Care Plan For Miners Begins

By The Associated Press

John L. Lewis began yesterday to put into operation the United Mine Workers' far-reaching program of free hospital and medical service to ailing coal miners.

The service will be provided by the UMW Welfare and Retirement Fund, of which Lewis is chief trustee. A 20-cent royalty on each ton of coal finances the fund, now building up at 100 million dollars a year.

From this, Lewis, the union's president, has announced he plans eventually to finance all medical and hospital care for the 400,000 soft coal miners. A separate fund is being used for Pennsylvania's 80,000 hard coal diggers.

As a start, activities will be directed to the hospitalization of miners who are already receiving disability benefits and pensions. These men, because they are not working, are unable to obtain services through an existing wage check-off system.

Also among the first to be cared for will be those with serious ailments who are unable to get adequate treatment in their communities.

Besides the hospital and medical program, the huge welfare fund finances monthly pensions of $100 to 62-year-old miners who have worked 20 years.

The medical and hospital program is headed by Dr. Warren F. Draper, former Deputy Surgeon General of the U. S. Public Health Service. Dr. Draper was major general in charge of the Public Health branch at Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces, during World War II. He also was former State Health Commissioner of Virginia.

Dr. Draper announced today the establishment of 10 area offices, with a physician in charge of each, to serve the 24 union districts in the soft coal fields.

In Store Strike

Union Guilty Of T-H Law Violation

By The Associated Press

A Government trial examiner in a precedent-making report, yesterday found a left-wing union guilty of violating the Taft-Hartley law in a New York City department store strike.

The strike was at two Oppenheim Collins stores in Manhattan and Brooklyn.

The union, Local 1250, Department Store Employes Union (Independent), was found to have violated the Taft-Hartley provision which forbids a union from striking to compel an employer to recognize it after another union has been officially certified as representative of the workers.

First Ruling on Provision

It was the first ruling on that provision of the law.

Yesterday's ruling was by Trial Examiner William F. Scharnikow of the National Labor Relations Board.

If the union appeals, the five-man NLRB itself will decide the case. The NLRB decisions are enforceable by the Federal courts.

Scharnikow recommended that the board order Local 1250 to cease trying to compel Oppenheim Collins to deal with it as long as the AFL Retails Clerks Union is the certified representative of the 475 employes involved.

AFL Won Election

The AFL union won an NLRB election among the employes on August 2. It was the only union on the ballot. Local 1250 was barred because its officers had not filed affidavits swearing they weren't Communists.

Local 1250 called a strike the day of the election. The NLRB certified the AFL union on September 1, after which Oppenheim Collins accused Local 1250 of an unfair labor practice.

Pending a final NLRB decision on this, the United States District Court at New York issued a top-gap injunction Sepember 14 forbidding Local 1250 from continuing its strike activities.

On October 8, the court ruled that the union had not obeyed the injunction, and found it in contempt of court. The union stopped picketing and appealed the contempt decree to the United States Court of Appeals.

75-Cent Minimum Wage Is Indorsed by Tobin

Trenton, N. J. Jan. 8 (U.P.).—Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin asserted tonight that the minimum wage must be hiked "as soon as possible from 40 to 75 cents an hour.

Tobin promised in an address here that the Labor Department "will work to the utmost with President Truman" to fulfill campaign pledges on such subjects as minimum wage, cost of living, housing, and, of course, the infamous Taft-Hartley law.

Beverley Files In Alexandria City Primary

Alexandria City Councilman Marshall J. Beverley is the first candidate to file a petition for the Democratic city council primary on April 5.

Beverley

A stormy petrel in Alexandria politics, Beverley is serving his first year on the council. He was elected last June, when the city changed from a nine to seven man council.

During a 10-day period in August last summer Beverley attacked the Alexandria assessor, health department, city manager, the city shop and the registrar's office.

Republicans and Democrats will hold a primary caucus on the same day—April 5—to nominate candidates for the city's June 14 general election. Deadline for filing for the primaries is February 4.

McCandlish Won't Run For Assembly Again

Robert J. McCandlish, jr., 39, Fairfax County attorney, yesterday announced he will not be a candidate for reelection to the Virginia House of Delegates in the August 2, 1949, Democratic primary.

He listed the pressure of his private business as the cause. McCandlish was first elected as delegate in a special election in 1942, called to fill a vacancy caused by the death o Col. R. R. Farr. His present term expires January 18, 1950.

Idol Believed to Be Baal Found on Cyprus

Nicosia, Cyprus, Jan. 8 (AP).—A finely wrought idol believed to represent Baal, god of the Ancient Syro-Phenician nations, has been unearthed at Engomi, near Famagusta.

Clad in a loin cloth and a bull horns headdress, the figure stands almost 2 feet high. French and Cyprus archeologists found it in the ruins of a building, perhaps a temple, built 3200 or more years ago.

King George Takes Rest Trip to Royal Lodge

London, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—King George VI, accompanied by Queen Elizabeth and Queen Mother Mary, left Buckingham Palace today for the royal lodge at Sandringham. It is the King's first trip since last November, when physicians ordered him to rest.

Suffering from a circulatory disease of the legs, he is expected to remain indoors at Sandringham except for occasional automobile outings. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the infant Prince Charles and Princess Margaret Rose drove to Sandringham Wednesday.

The royal families will remain at Sandringham for several weeks.

Radio Licenses Face Tightening, FCC Says

By the United Press

The Government warned yesterday that it will require more regulation or better scientific techniques to make room for all the radio, television and short-wave broadcasters who want to be heard or seen.

That note of alarm was sounded by the Federal Communications Commission in its fourteenth annual report on its job of policing the ether.

The commission said that by mid-1948 there were 131,000 authorized radio stations elbowing each other for room in the spectrum, plus some 150,000 mobile stations such as aeronautical, marine, radar, police, fire and railroad units.

Taxicab companies in cities all over the country use about 3000 stations, and about the same number are used in general industry, the FCC said. Last year, a Texan wanted a radio license for diaper pickup service, and a Chicago cemetery asked for one to direct funeral corteges.

The report pointed out that only one thirty-thousandth of the known radio spectrum is being used now for standard broadcasting. But it said most of the surplus room is in the very high frequencies which cannot be used fully at the present stage of radio development.

Until methods and equipment are available to make use of the "upstairs spectrum," it added, the FCC will have to tighten up its licensing and see to it that the existing bands are used effectively.

The commission said that at the end of its 1948 fiscal year last June 30, there were 3163 major broadcasting outlets in operation, including 2034 standard radio stations, 1020 frequency modulation (FM) outlets, and 109 television stations.

That represented an increase of 239 standard, 102 FM and 43 television stations for the year.

9 Firemen Hurt as Blaze Ruins Alexandria Bowling Alleys

to the basement also made fire fighting difficult, Padgett added.

Flames were first seen about 5:45 a. m. when combustion gasses exploded, breaking out all glass in the center's large front window and bowing the steel frames.

Alton Rogers, manager of the Little Tavern Shop at 828 N. Washington st., phoned the fire department. So did C. N. Hall, night attendant at the adjacent Gulf Service Station.

Yesterday evening, after an inspection of the ruined building, Fire Chief Padgett and Deputy State Fire Marshall Wilbur Walker said they were unable to find how the fire began.

Padgett, however, said he believed flames had started to the right rear of the first story, later spreading to the basement.

Alley Manager Edwin S. Mitchall said he and assistant manager Burt D. Plumadore were the last to leave the alleys at 2 a. m. yesterday. At that time, "everything was all right," Mitchall said.

The alleys, built in 1941, normally are heated by oil-blowers, Mitchall said, but he added that the system had not been in use for several days because of warm weather.

Two of the firemen injured yesterday suffered from smoke inhalation, Padgett said. They were Leonard Devers, assistant chief of the rescue squad, and Pvt. Melvin Gray of No. 2 Engine Company. Both were treated on the scene and sent home.

Also injured were: Charles Clark of No. 3, treated at Alexandria hospital for a glass cut hand; Pvts. Clarence Bender, Claude Haynes and Raymond Alexander of No. 4, were treated on the scene, as were Thomas Quinn and Allen Brown of No. 3, and Ashby Poole of No. 5.

They were treated by the Alexandria and Penn Daw Rescue Squads, which stood by the blaze. Shortly after 9 a. m. yesterday, the Mount Vernon Fire Company in Fairfax County was called in to take the place of one of the Alexandria companies and relieve it for duty elsewhere in the city.

Chief Padgett said bowling alley blazes are invariably difficult to fight because of the highly-waxed floors. In 1944, the Del Ray Bowling Alleys in the 2400 block of Mount Vernon ave. burned at a loss of $150,000.

According to Chief Padgett, installation of a fire sprinkler system in the Recreation Center might have prevented the building's loss. He said he had asked the city for a law requiring such an installation, without success.

Montgomery Fight Threat On Salary Issue Fades

4 Commissioners Say They'll Take No Action to Get Pay For Next 2 Years

Another Montgomery County charter legal fight involving salary payments to the county commissioners is not likely to develop, an informal poll showed yesterday.

At stake is approximately $20,000, the combined salaries of the five commissioners who this month will be replaced by a seven-member county council elected Thursday.

The commissioners were elected to four-year terms as commissioners and have served only two years. Some lawyers have contended the commissioners are entitled to their salaries for their full terms.

Reversing opinions previously expressed, four of five commissioners reached yesterday said they would not take legal action to collect their salaries.

Several members of the new council also interviewed expressed the view that the commissioners' jobs will be nonexistent when the commissioners are replaced and, hence, they could not legally be paid.

The Federal Diary by Jerry Kluttz will be found today on Page 1.

One councilman, an attorney, pointed out the question may not even come before the new council. When the changeover takes place, he said, the council's legal adviser will probably rule that the salary payments are illegal and the commissioners' only recourse would be a lawsuit.

The four commissioners who commented yesterday were: President Brooke Johns and Commissioners Oliver W. Youngblood, George Esworthy, and Charles H. Jamison. Commissioner Wesley I. Sauter could not be reached.

The commissioners' present legal adviser, F. Barnard Welsh, yesterday reiterated, however, his belief that the commissioners should be paid.

"If the commissioners want to collect, they can," he said. "There is plenty of legal precedent in the Court of Appeals for such payments," he declared.

Sojourners Hear Eichelberger, Install Officers

Lieut. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, former commander of allied occupation ground forces in Japan, last night addressed the annual dinner meeting of the Washington Chapter No. 3, National Sojourners.

More than 200 persons attended the affair held at the Hotel Mayflower.

Feature of the meeting was the installation of officers by Brig. Gen. Merritt B. Curtis, national president.

Man, 59, Struck By Streetcar, in Critical Condition

Clyde W. Reynolds, 59, of 1730 M st. nw., was seriously injured last night when struck by a streetcar as he stood on the car tracks on Connecticut ave. at De Sales st. nw.

Reynolds was admitted to Emergency Hospital in critical condition with head and possible internal injuries. Operator of the streetcar was identified by police as Michael A. Hudock, 22, of 1716 21st st. nw.

Hudock was charged with failing to yield the right-of-way to a pedestrian.

Basement Blaze Routs Tenants of Ohio Apartments

Smoke from a basement fire in the Ohio Apartments, 1436 Meridian pl. nw., last night drove a number of tenants to the street.

Twelve pieces of apparatus responded to the alarm. The blaze started in the locker section of the basement, fire officials said.

Motor cycle policemen from all sections of the city were called upon to direct the jammed traffic in the neighborhood.

In an earlier fire, caused by an exploding gas stove in the kitchen at 1905 15th st. nw., two persons suffered first degree burns. They were Cora McKenzie, 60, and Charles Lomax, 24.

Sargent Will To Benefit 2 Churches

The Washington Cathedral and St. John's Parish will benefit substantially under provisions of the will of the late Miss Helen Louise Sargent, who died October 25.

Miss Sargent, a lifelong Washington resident, died at Mount Vernon at the age of 68, while attending a convention of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association.

Probate papers filed yesterday in District Court disclosed that Miss Sargent, daughter of the late Capt. Natham Sargent, USN, left an estate of $205,000, almost all of which was real property.

The estate includes her home at 925 17th st. nw., also property at 945 Pennsylvania ave. nw., 719 Market space nw., and 627 Indiana ave. nw.

The home goes to the vestry of St. John's Parish as a church-school house, rectory, or other office. Should the church sell the $37,566 building, it may retain $25,000 and give the rest to the estate.

Bequests to 22 individuals total $37,000.

Proceeds of a trust of the bulk of the estate go for life to two friends, Mary Randolph, former social secretary to Calvin Coolidge, and Anne Powel Randolph, former social secretary to Andrew Mellon. Both women live at the Mayflower Hotel.

Upon their death the trust income goes for life to two cousins, Helen L. Goldsborough, of Shepherdstown, W. Va., and Edmund L. Goldsborough of Narbeth, Pa.

At the death of the Goldsboroughs the trust property is divided. One-half goes to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation, and the rest is shared by the Church Orphanage Association of St. John's Parish, Washington Home for Incurables, Navy Relief Society, Children's Hospital for the benefit of destitute colored children, the Mount Vernon Ladies Association, Episcopal Hospital for the benefit of destitute colored children and for a mural for the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis.

'March of Dimes' Support Asked By District Board

The District Commissioners yesterday appealed for support of the "March of Dimes." The appeal was in the form of a proclamation in advance of the campaign which opens January 13 and ends January 31.

No quota will be set for the District, officials said. Last year $147,000 was raised here and more is hoped for in the current drive.

The Montgomery County goal is set at $30,000, an increase of $10,000 over 1948, while the Arlington goal of $50,000 remains unchanged.

Federal Funds Are Sought in Pollution Fight

The Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin yesterday moved to secure additional Federal funds to fight river pollution.

The action was taken yesterday at the conclusion of a two-day meeting in the Mayflower Hotel.

The plan, in the form of a resolution by L. Harold Sothoron, Maryland State Senator, termed past legislation "not adequate to stimulate and encourage" States and municipalities "to actively engage in progress" to battle pollution.

It resolved that the river commission request the Council of State Governments to study amendments to Federal legislation which "would result in encouraging local governments" and industry to take more active anti-pollution and conservation measures by grants in aid.

The commission also decided to consider, at its Bedford Springs, Pa., meeting in April, plans to lessen the dumping of sewage and garbage from pleasure craft used as housing units.

Citing the number of vessels docked at Washington and other cities and used as permanent homes, William Carey, director of public health engineering for the District Health Department, declared the amount of such matter emanating from boats is negligible.

But, he emphasized, such practices stir public indignation.

ABC Board Hearing Set

4 Arrested in Philadelphia Held Involved in D. C. Thefts

Four Washingtonians, two of them only 16, have been arrested in Philadelphia after a holiday holdup spree was cut short by a policeman in plain clothes, when they attempted to rob him.

The quartet went to Philadelphia early this month and began their operations with the help of a Philadelphia man, police said.

They made their first mistake last Sunday night, police said, when they approached an automobile which had stopped for a stop sign in Philadelphia and informed the driver, "This is a holdup."

The driver was a policeman in plain clothes. He fired through both windows at the would-be robbers, and wounded the Philadelphia man twice.

Although the others escaped, the wounded man disclosed their names after being taken to a hospital. Within 24 hours, the others were under arrest.

Philadelphia police said the two 16-year-old youths confessed that they had stolen $800 worth of merchandise from Isadore Cohen's men's furnishing store at 512 4th st. sw., Washington, on the weekend of December 28.

Detective Sergt. S. R. Russell of the District police, was dispatched to investigate. As a result of his work, 14 other robberies were attributed to the Washington group.

In addition to robbing Cohen's store, the minors admitted snatching money from cash registers of 11 District stores, 10 of them Safeway stores, and the stealing of three watches, all since April, 1948.

One of the minors is also wanted for seven taxicab holdups in Philadelphia, police said.

The other minor has admitted one Philadelphia holdup.

The two other Washingtonians, neither of whom have admitted anything, are Robert Love, 25, 308 K st. sw., charged with one holdup by Philadelphia police, and Melvin Curry, 29, 4800 Bass pl. se., charged with six holdups in Philadelphia.

Russell said $300 worth of the merchandise stolen from the Cohen store was recovered in three suitcases when the quartet was arrested. The remainder had been sold, he said.

Washington police will secure warrants next week against the four to use against them when Philadelphia police dispose of the case.

Best Decorated House Prize Goes To Gawler Family

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Gawler, of 9519 East Stanhope rd., Rock Creek Hills, were awarded first prize for the best decorated house during the holidays, R. T. Compton, president of the Rock Creek Hills Citizens Association, announced yesterday.

A cup will be presented to the winning householders at the group's first meeting of the year, February 15. The contest covered the Rock Creek Hills and Larchmont Knolls areas.

Runners-up were Dr. and Mrs. Foster Sheller, 3600 Saul rd.; Mr. and Mrs. Guy Harper, jr., 9604 West Stanhope rd., and Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. Evans, 9511 East Stanhope rd.

$75,000 More Required for Police Station

A $75,000 deficency appropriation for construction of Fourteenth Precinct station house at Benning rd. and 42d st. ne., will be asked of Congress in the next "two or three weeks," Walter L. Fowler, D. C. budget officer, said yesterday.

The money, to meet additional costs of construction and materials, will be put with $174,000 appropriated in fiscal 1948. It is expected that costs of construction and equipment will make the station cost nearly a quarter million dollars.

Bids were opened June 29 after the $174,000 was made available. Low bid was $195,591, submitted by Lee T. Turner, 3616 14th st. nw. The bid was rejected by the District Commissioners.

Lieut. James H. Cox, Police Department budget officer, said the additional $75,000 will be spent as follows: $5000 for drawing plans and specifications; $10,000 for equipment, and $60,000 to meet anticipated additional construction costs.

The Fourteenth Precinct Station now occupies quarters in the Davis School annex, on H st. se., between 44th and 45th sts. The Board of Education in July informed the Commissioners the space will be needed for school purposes this September.

Dr. Schneider to Speak

Dr. Fern Schneider, supervisor of Montgomery County high schools, will speak on "Our Curriculum in the Light of Present-Day Philosophy" before the P-TA of the Takoma Junior High School at 8 p. m. Wednesday in the school auditorium.

Downtown Ban On Private Cars Set for Inaugural

Barrett Says Autos Will Be Restricted Jan. 20 From 10 A.M. Until After Parade

Police Supt. Robert J. Barrett announced yesterday that no private automobiles will be allowed to move in the downtown area on January 20, Inauguration Day, from 10 a. m. until several hours after the Inaugural parade.

Outlining parking and traffic regulations for that day, Superintendent Barrett told Washingtonians they should leave their cars at home as far as possible.

He said it will be impossible to park in the downtown area after 10 a. m., and all cars found in the no-parking areas will be impounded. Those parked in commercial lots after 10 a. m. will not be allowed to move without special permission until after the parade.

Special Schedules

Special bus and streetcar schedules have been worked out to handle the crowds by the Inaugural public safety and transportation committees.

Streetcars will stop running on Pennsylvania ave. between the Capitol and 21st st. nw. at 10 a. m., and will resume operation about 15 minutes after the parade ends. Buses will be parked just off the parade route and will move again almost immediately after the area clears.

Steel cables will be strung along the parade route from the Capitol to Pennsylvania ave. and 21st st. nw., during the night of January 19. The following cross streets will be kept open until the 10 a. m. deadline on Inauguration Day, when they will be closed to all but emergency traffic:

Delaware ave., 3d, 7th, 9th, 12th, 14th and 15th sts., New York, E. Executive and W. Executive aves., 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th sts.

Alternate Routes

Major Barrett said incoming motorists will be directed to take alternate routes into the city or transfer to public transportation when traffic becomes too heavy. A radio and phone network with Virginia and Maryland police will keep Metropolitan Police headquarters informed of traffic conditions.

Arlington (Va.) police, faced with incoming traffic over the Highway and Memorial Bridges headed toward the parade area, will direct motorists to park on the grass along the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway and in available parts of the Pentagon parking lot, Major Barrett said.

Inspector Floyd A. Truscott, assistant police superintendent, will be in command of all police details assigned to the Inaugural parade route. He will direct assignments from a radio car. Other police radio cars will be stationed at all first-aid stations.

Special Police Aid

Barrett said he is having special plainclothesmen sent here from other cities to assist local police. Special leaflets will be distributed by foot patrolmen to all motorists in out-of-town cars, cautioning them not to leave baggage in their automobiles.

Meanwhile, addition of another star, Lena Horne, to the list of performers for the Inaugural Gala, was announced by Carter T. Barron, chairman of special events. She will appear before the President and his family with other entertainers on Inaugural Eve at the National Guard Armory.

Hawaii's float in the parade will be a colorful assemblage depicting island kings and warriors of the past in old-time costumes, with tropical flowers and greenery for decorations, it was announced yesterday. Twenty girls on horseback will represent the islands of the Hawaiian group.

Baby's Life Saved

Blood Gave Family Best Christmas

To those who gave life's blood during the pre-Christmas rush, and thus saved the life of golden-haired Cecilia Campbell, 11 months old, a mother and grandmother are now extending their heartfelt thanks.

Attendants at Children's Hospital, where Cecilia was admitted with meningitis just four days before Christmas, say their supply of blood and plasma from the Red Cross Blood Center were highly instrumental in saving her life.

She was brought to the hospital suffering from shock and "in very desperate straits," according to the attending physician. Placed in a respirator at 11:30 a. m. December 21, she was receiving blood plasma at noon and responded favorably right away.

Another application of plasma that day, followed by a whole blood transfusion on each of the next two days, appeared to renew her life.

The baby's grandmother, Mrs. Verle Kidwell, with whom Cecilia, her brothers and widowed mother live, said it "was all the Christmas present we wanted" when she was told on Christmas Day the child would live.

Mrs. Kidwell, who lives at Woodland and Oregon sts., Columbia Park, Md., recalled the night her grandchild was taken to the hospital:

"I was sure she would not live to get there, she was choking so terribly. It was wonderful to see how the doctors went to work to save her, and such a relief to know they had blood on hand to give her transfusions and to see the baby respond to it."

"I prayed for her to live. All I can say is that between the blood, the doctors and the hand of God, she was saved."

Cecelia was discharged from the hospital last Wednesday, and is now happily convalescing at home.

Her mother, Mrs. Kidwell Campbell, a Treasury Department employe, received eight pints of blood given by volunteer donors when the baby was born last February, the grandmother said. Cecelia's father died last May 15.

During the past week, which marked the first year's anniversary of the District Red Cross Blood Center, a total of 426 pints of blood were distributed to 28 hospitals in Washington, D. C., Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia by the Washington Regional Blood Center, at 1730 E st. nw., in the District Red Cross Chapter House. This total represented blood collected at the local center and also by the Red Cross Bloodmobile visiting neighboring communities in adjoining States.

The blood, which is free of charge, was distributed as follows:

District of Columbia—Children's Hospital, 10.5; Columbia, seven; Casualty, eight; Emergency, 28; Episcopal, five; Freedmen's 29; Garfield Memorial, 12; Georgetown University, 20; George Washington University, 61; Gallinger, one; Mount Alto Veterans, seven; Providence, three; Sibley Memorial, 21; St. Elizabeth's, 19; United States Soldier's Home, three, and Doctors, 20.

Maryland—Glenn Dale Sanatorium, Glenn Dale, 20; Prince Georges, Cheverly, 17; Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, Takoma Park, two, and Washington County, Hagerstown, 38.

Virginia—Alexandria hospital, Alexandria, 28; Arlington hospital, Arlington, six; Winchester Memorial, Winchester, 11.5, and Loudoun County, Leesburg, 11.

Negro Member Costs Amherst Frat Charter

Cleveland, Jan. 8 (AP).—The executive committee of Phi Kappa Psi Fraternity has revoked the charter of its Amherst College Chapter, which last year pledged a Negro, a spokesman disclosed today.

The revocation followed a hearing conducted by the executive committee at Chicago, December 30-31, on charges of breach of agreement filed by fraternity members.

The spokesman explained that the Amherst chapter, at the fraternity's national convention in Estes Park, Colo., last July agreed to depledge Gibbs and not to repledge or initiate him.

Since then, the spokesman added, the chapter has repledged Gibbs and threatened to initiate him.

Chapter Is 'Shocked' At Losing Its Charter

Amherst, Mass., Jan. 8 (AP).—The Amherst chapter of Phi Kappa Psi fraternity said today the house was "shocked" at losing its charter because of a Negro member, but added: "We feel we owe apologies to no one."

James G. Bandeen, Midland, Mich., recently elected president of the house, which organized as a local fraternity, "Amherst Phi Psi," after its suspension from the national group last November, declared:

"The whole house is shocked by the executive council's decision. At the same time we feel that we owe apologies to no one, except, perhaps, to Tom, who has gone through a very difficult and embarrassing experience."

Bandeen referred to Thomas W. Gibbs, Evanston, Ill., the Negro member who was initiated November 23.

Marines Had Race Barrier, Board Told

Two United States Marine Corps letters of 1943, imposing racial barriers to promotion, were offered as evidence of military segregation and discrimination yesterday to the Commission of Inquiry into the Wartime Treatment of Negro GIs.

The letters, signed by the then Commandant Thomas Holcomb, said that under no circumstances should colored noncommissioned officers outnumber or outrank noncolored noncommissioned officers.

The evidence was introduced at the 12th st. YMCA to members of the commission, which included Arthur Garfield Hays, counsel; Thurman L. Dodson, 307 E st. nw., president of the National Bar Association; Joseph L. Rauh, jr., national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, and Henry Epstein, former New York State solicitor general.

The commission, which formed last May, was told that these letters had been superseded by a 1946 letter, but that Marine Commandant Clifton B. Cates had declined an invitation to send a representative to appear before the commission to document the new policy.

Alfred E. Smith, Washington correspondent for the Chicago Defender, told the commission that although top military leaders were showing a change of attitude toward discrimination "orders against Jim Crow were still not carried out at lower levels of command."

Smith presented to the commission "thousands of letters he said he had received from Negro GIs who wrote him during the war.

Others who testified during the day-long session were Al Levy, who told the commission he was court-martialed and jailed in 1943 for protesting abuse of Negro soldiers; Milton Sachs of the Washington Chapter of the American Veterans Committee, who told the commission of an instance in Karachi, India, where an anti-segregation policy had worked successfully, and Lieut. Patrick Munroe, who told of his experiences in the South Pacific as an officer in a Negro regiment.

Judges Called To Meeting on Va. Procedures

Richmond, Va., Jan. 8 (AP).—The Judicial Council of Virginia today adopted proposals designed to expedite the administration of justice in the trial courts of the State, and the Supreme Court of Appeals.

The council of 10 members, headed by Chief Justice Edward W. Hudgins, said it wished to emphasize that it had not undertaken to propose a new system of procedure to supplant present practices. Rather, its purpose has been to make modifications in existing procedure looking toward simplicity and uniformity. The council believes the wheels of justice will turn faster if obsolete forms and procedures are abolished.

Findings which the council approved will be explained by the committee chairmen at a judicial conference to be held in the Supreme Court here February 26. All judges of the Circuit and Corporation Courts in Virginia have been invited. Governor Tuck will address the meeting, and entertain the judges at a luncheon.

One change that should speed up civil litigation permits the trial judge to call a pre-trial conference, or requires him to call such a conference, upon the motion of either party. Such conferences would be a means of simplifying the issue in debate, amending pleadings, making stipulations on points on which opposing council are in agreement.

The cost of appeals would be halved by cutting down the printed record that must accompany an appeal. Justices of the Supreme Court are required only to examine the printed record. Current practice requires that the entire record be printed and submitted to the court before the case is argued.

Since appeals usually are based only on four or five points in a case, the court seldom needs to examine the entire record. Hence, the council felt that lawyers could specify what parts of the record were needed, and have only those parts copied for printing.

Printing constitutes a large portion of the cost of appeal. Justice Hudgins noted that in one case where costs amounted to more than $1200, costs for the same case would have been trimmed to around $500 under the proposed change in procedure.

Municipalities Urged to Seek Home RuleLaw

Baltimore, Jan. 8 (AP).—Dr. Horace E. Flack said today that 60 per cent of the State Legislature's business concerns local matters and suggested it's time for a general law granting "simple powers" to Maryland municipalities.

Dr. Flack, director of the Department of Legislative Reference, spoke at the meeting of the Maryland League of Municipalities.

He urged the officials from 34 Maryland towns attending the meeting to seek legislation that would grant them home rule.

The reference director said Maryland is "one of the few, if not the only State left" that still grants individual and special charters to each of its municipalities.

He asserted that each time a political subdivision wanted additional amendments to its charter, such action had to be taken individually with the result that as many as 100 to 250 local charter changes might be introduced in a single session of the Legislature.

Dr. Flack suggested that a general law might be adopted setting municipalities up into different classifications, adding that amending charters then would not only be simpler but have the additional support of other towns in the same classification.

Joseph M. Ray, executive secretary of the league, appointed a committee to conduct a membership drive for the group. One hundred and fifty municipalities are eligible for membership, Ray said.

Judge Johnson, 91, Becomes Oldest Federal Jurist

Salt Lake City, Jan. 8 (AP).—United States District Judge Tillman D. Johnson turned 91 today, reaching a long-time goal of becoming the oldest Federal judge in history.

The spry jurist passed the record of the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, who retired from the United States Supreme Court in 1932 at the age of 90. On his birthday last year Judge Johnson said "I'm aiming to beat him (Holmes)."

The judge remarked: "We oldsters are always inclined to criticize the young generation and the luxuries of modern-day life. But I'm going to be different. I was a member of the younger generation once myself—a long time ago. And as for luxuries, I like them."

Judge Johnson was born in Rutherford County, Tenn. He was appointed to the Federal bench in 1915 by Woodrow Wilson. He has handled more than 16,000 cases.

Retirement? He hasn't given as much as a hint.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

The All-Importance of Timing

President Truman forecast the business outlook for 1949 in positive terms in his State of the Union message: "The Employment Act of 1946 pledges the Government to use all its resources to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power. This means that the Government is firmly committed to protect business and the people against the dangers of recession and against the evils of inflation. This means that the Government must adapt its plans and policies to meet changing circumstances." That s a distinctly inflationary, or, at least, a nondeflationary promise—and forecast.

Livingston

At the first definite sign of a slump, or unemployment, the President will undertake to shore up the economy. Presumably, Truman, through the Federal Works Agency, will have ready public works to throw into the breach; or perhaps he'll allow Secretary Forrestal to step up the armament program because it will prop employment; or perhaps he will push all the harder for widening the Social Security base, particularly unemployment compensation.

Lincolnesque Message

The tone of the message was Lincolnesque in political idealism. He is going to raise the standard of living of the country—not only in basic necessities (food, clothing, and shelter)—but beyond that he wants Federal aid to education, a Nation-wide health program, rural electrification to ease the lot of the farmer, a 75-cent minimum wage, equality of economic opportunity; also public works to develop hydroelectric power, irrigation, navigation, and flood control so as to conserve the Nation's resources.

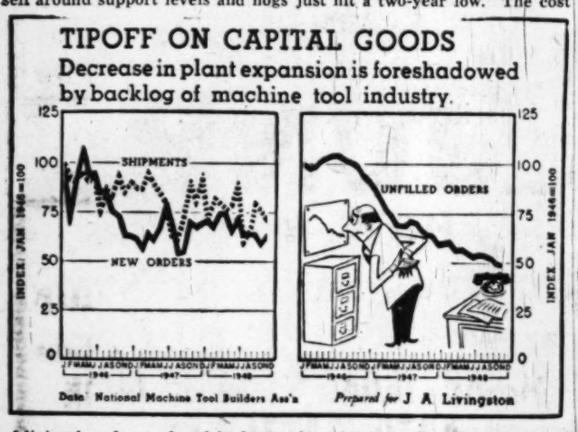
Obviously, the President is paying heed to the election returns. He got his mandate from the farmers and the workers and he's going to carry it out. But . . . wisdom requires good timing.

The greatest resource of a Government interested in stabilizing employment—in keeping the economy on an even keel ovr the years—is a backlog of public works. When schools, hospitals, postoffices, public buildings, harbors, dams, etc., are still on blueprints they're to a national government what money in the bank is to an individual. They can be drawn on to create employment, purchasing power, and a greater demand for goods and services. They're to be husbanded, not squandered.

That does not mean they're never to be built. But it does mean, and emphatically, that they ought not to be started when the Nation is just about building its head off, when construction costs are high and manpower and materials are still scarce. The Government ought to avoid generating the very forces it is fighting—namely, the "evils of inflation."

Deflation Side of Picture

At the moment, deflationary forces are at work in the economy. Christmas sales were not up to expectations. Numerous companies have laid off workers. Men's clothing manufacturers have been pushing overstocked goods on the market. Agricultural products continue to sell around support levels and hogs just hit a two-year low. The cost of living has dropped and is due to drop further. New homes started are down from a year ago. Numerous business firms have either completed postwar expansion programs or are hesitant about undertaking them. Thus machine tool orders are down (see chart).



Obviously, then, the presidential readiness to prop production is sensible. Yet that doesn't mean he should overman the already overworked pumps. Some further leveling off in prices and production would not necessarily indicate a sharp recession. Indeed, it would be entirely consistent with the intermittent sector-by-sector readjustments we have had throughout the poswar period—in amusements, furs, jewelry, restaurants, books, frosted foods, radios, etc.

In Case of Error

But in the President's message there's a suggestion that he wants to cope with a business letdown even before it shows signs of developing. The peril is that he'll "overcope" with what isn't here. He'll inflate—with large-scale public works and with social undertakings. Indeed, he may have that in mind in asking Congress for standby price control powers. If he errs, he'll clamp price ceilings on the economy and hide his error.

The President ought to give the economy a chance. Admittedly, in mapping out his program for the year ahead, in setting forth his budget, he must try to achieve social and political goals; he must redeem his pledges. But, in doing so, he must consider the economic consequences. Here we are with over-full employment, a large backlog of demand for automobiles, housing, industrial plant and equipment (despite the drop in orders), and great, unfilled requirements for State and local public works.

If the President has to inject Federal public works into the economy now, well, then, we might as well give up hope for economic freedom. We'll never be able to count on a production-consumption economy that balances. Worse than that, if Truman uses up his blueprints today, then when we really need Government aid for a high standard of production and consumption, he'll have to boondoggxle.

Atom Clock To Be Subject At Parley

The "atomic clock," microwave oscillators and other high frequency measuring devices will be the primary subjects discussed before the first national conference of radio and electrical engineers meeting here Monday through Wednesday with representatives from the National Bureau of Standards.

Dr. Edward U. Condon, director of the Bureau of Standards, will welcome members of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers and the Institute of Radio Engineers, here for the conference, at a luncheon at 12:30 p. m., Monday, at the Roger Smith Hotel.

The first technical papers presented at 1:30 p. m. Monday, will include a report by Dr. Harold Lyons, chief of the microwave section, Bureau of Standards, outlining refinements to the present "atomic clock" that reduces its margin of error to one in nine billion parts.

New York Cotton

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—Cotton futures closed with losses of 35 cents to 1.20 a bale. A heavy selling wave swept the market in late dealings. Most of the pressure was touched off by weakness in grains, fats and oils.

During most of the session the market held in higher ranges and there was a sustained demand coming through trade interests who were fixing prices against sales of cotton to the Army Quartermaster. When this buying subsided the market was bare of support and the general selling followed.

The range follows:

5 Contestants Get Perfect Quizdown Scores As Jackson School Defeats Barrett, 850-650

By V. R. Montanari
Post Reporter

High-scoring fourth, fifth and sixth graders of the Stonewall Jackson School won out over their friendly opponents from the Kate Waller Barrett School on yesterday's quizdown, first of four to be held this month among Arlington County (Va.) schools.

Final score on the weekly quiz show sponsored by The Washington Post and broadcast over WTOP was 850 to 650. More than 600 loyal supporters and parents were in the audience in the Thomas Jefferson Junior High School auditorium in Arlington, where the show originated.

The big showing of 850 points made by Stonewall Jackson boys and girls, whose school is at 855 N. Edison st., Arlington, included 600 points scored by three aces who didn't miss a question. There were also two perfect scorers for the Kate Waller Barrett School, which is at 4400 N. Henderson rd., Arlington.

Two of the perfect scoring members of the winning team were girls, and both were Susans, too, while the third was Warren Beaty, 11, of 930 N. Liberty st., Arlington, a sixth-grader.

Susan Philbeck, 10-year-old 5A blonde who is looking forward to being a school teacher some day, starred by knowing that the Portuguese were the first to reach India by an all-water route and by naming all five of the kinds of teeth we have, instead of just three she was asked for. Susan, who lives at 853 N. Burlington st., Arlington, is a trader by hobby, and likes to exchange cards, pennies and match covers.

The other "Sue" or "Susie" was Susan Edwards, also 10, in Grade 5, who told Quizmaster Vern Hansen not only that the Aztecs fought Cortez in Mexico, but also that bacteria are the smallest non-green plants, rather than yeast plants or mushrooms. Susan, who lives at 909 N. Livingston st., Arlington, went to school in Stuttgart, Germany, for two years while there with her family.

Warren, who wants to be a sports announcer when he grows up and drew applause when he opened up on a mythical broadcast from Griffith Stadium, knew the famous first words sent by telegraph and came through with "Daniel Boone" as the frontiersman who first followed the "Wilderness Road."

Joel Eigen of 413 N. George Mason dr. and Judith Heller of 210 N. Glebe rd., Arlington, were the two Kate Waller Barrett School upholders who scored mental bullseyes.

"Been Around" in 10 Years

Joel, who likes reading and art, but who hopes to be a scientist, admitted he had "been around" during his 10 years, having been in 24 States and in Canada before he got to grade 5A. He informed the radio audience in passing that Canada was "just the same as the United States except for the licenses" (which are a different color).

He had no trouble with the Strait of Magellan, knowing it was at the southern tip of South America, or with the names of two trees that stay green the year round.

Judith, a dark-haired girl whose neat pigtails were tied with white ribbons, didn't even let Quizmaster Hansen finish a question about George Washington's secretary who later became Secretary of the Treasury, before she came out with "Alexander Hamilton."

"Judy," who is 11 and a member of grade 6A, has an ambition to be a lawyer.

Other members of the Stonewall Jackson team were: John Howard, 9, 4A, of 617 N. Buchanan st.; Douglas Elliott, 9, grade 4, 6035 N. 9th st., and Ann Westervelt, 10, 6A, 4721 Wilson blvd.

Others in Barrett Line-up

The others in the Kate Waller Barrett line-up were Charles Willingham, 9, grade 4, 4311 N. Pershing dr.; Bob Torrance, 9, grade 4, 100 Galveston st.; Harry Zachrison, 12, grade 5, 3921 N. 5th st., and Richard Bushnell, 11, grade 6, 227 N. Wakefield st.

First Woman Puts Band on Horned Owl

Tenafly, N. J., Jan. 8 (NYHT).—Mrs. Betty Carnes, whose interest in birds is so well known that the letter carrier delivers to her mail addressed to "The Bird Woman, Tenafly," established a new record today. She banded a great horned owl, at the cost of a nicked ear and gashed fingers, becoming the first woman to accomplish the feat.

She already was the first woman to band a peregrine falcon, and the first to band a bald eagle, of which she has banded seven.

Bubo, a name Mrs. Carnes applied to her feathered guest because he is known to naturalists as Bubo Virginianus, was caught in a steel trap a few weeks ago. That method of catching owls is illegal in New Jersey and the New Jersey Audubon Society intervened and confiscated Bubo. The owl was turned over to Mrs. Carnes by the society.

She had quite a battle before getting the band on Bubo.

In five years Mrs Carnes has had 30,000 birds drop in at her home, and has banded 8000 of them, all of whose records are inscribed in her books. The principal purposes in banding birds is to determine their range and their flight courses.

Some of the visiting birds find the life so attractive they remain and become pets. A screech owl has the run of the house now. Named Dopey, he seems to be a dyspeptic, and is pretty morose a good deal of the time, but cheers up at night when Mrs. Carnes' husband, Herbert, comes home.

Carnes is more or less neutral about screech owls, but Dopey is crazy about him. When Mr. Carnes, who is partly bald, gets seated comfortably after dinner, newspaper in hand, Dopey swings silently from his perch and alights on Carnes' head, where he gurgles with delight. Carnes gurgled, too, at first, but he has got over it.

Aging Bloodhound Spots Culprit in Posse Spectators

Palatka, Fla., Jan. 8 (U.P.). — An aging hound with an unerring nose today was the hero of a manhunt.

When the limping bloodhound nuzzled his man with a hoarse whoop of triumph, the posse and 150 spectators just couldn't believe it.

The culprit was right in their midst.

The fugitives, Dwayne Emerson, 15, and Henry Gurley, 19, both of Painesville, Ohio, were surrounded in an orange grove.

A Negro trusty was brought from the nearby Gainesville, Fla., jail, with the tired, old hound he had trained from puppyhood.

"This hound is on his last legs," County Judge C. S. Green scoffed.

The dog's eyes bagged like an old man's. One eye watered all the time. He looked sad.

The dog crisscrossed the grove leisurely. Then he zigzagged through the crowd of watchers.

He walked up, sniffed at Gurley and let out his deep-bass howl.

"Thas yoah man," the trusty said confidently.

Gurley, who had doubled back and joined the onlookers, sheepishly admitted the dog was right.

School Bond Action Slated

Woodstock, Va., Jan. 8 (AP).—The Shenandoah County School Board has announced it will meet Monday with the board of supervisors to consider another $200,000 bond issue for improvements at Strasburg High and Elementary School.

After a special session here last night, the board said it would be willing to ask for another referendum if the proper type of petition were presented to it.

The board said it wanted a petition of 1000 signers. These signers should be "distributed proportionately" among Shenandoah's districts, the school officials said.

In exchange for this decision to try again for improvements at the school, the board asked the Strasburg Citizens' School Association to withhold circulating the petition until after Monday's meeting.

The school association met with the board last night in the wake of Tuesday's failure of the first referendum. Shenandoah voters turned down the bond issue for the school, and the following day some 200 students walked out of the institution in protest.

They staged a two-hour demonstration in downtown Strasburg and then returned to their classes.

Anglo-Russian Trade Parleys Expected Soon

London, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—New Anglo-Russian trade talks, aimed at a greatly modified form of agreement, are expected to begin following the receipt of the Soviet's answer to a British request for 1,500,000 tons of grain, it was learned today.

The reply left the door open for an interim agreement instead of the long term pact envisaged originally.

The Russians have been reluctant to double the amount supplied Britain last year, because they claim they have been unable to place more than 15 per cent of their orders for British machinery under the original agreement.

Miracles of Music At Coolidge Recital

By Paul Hume

You are asked in reading these words to believe in miracles. For miracles took place last night in the Coolidge Auditorium of the Library of Congress.

There, under the auspices of the Whittall Foundation, Zino Francescatti and Robert Casadesus played sonatas for violin and piano. According to the latest edition of Webster, a miracle is "a wonder or a wonderful thing." It is also "an event or effect in the physical world transcending our knowledge of the laws of nature."

Casadesus and Francescatti played in miraculous manner, sonatas of Bach, Brahms, Debussy, and Cesar Franck. These two artists stand at the top of their profession. They have no superiors and few peers. It would not be surprising if their personal pleasure is playing such music together in so magnificent a fashion exceeded that of their most enthusiastic listeners. We must add that we have never before witnessed such tumultuous acclamation as that following the sonatas of Brahms and Franck last evening.

It is idle for a typewriter and newsprint to be used to describe the effect of last night's piano and violin playing. We could speak of the perfection of techniques, the superb phrasing in every measure of all four sonatas—the impeccable staccato from the piano, and the majestic way Casadesus handles his dynamics in every level.

We could refer to Francescatti's unparalleled tone and his imagination in the subtlest nuances. And yet we cannot give you the slightest impression of how these two geniuses made music alive and exciting, or how they literally took away your breath with insight into phrases you thought you knew inside out.

Concerts come and go these days, in public, on the air, and on phonograph records. Musicians of varying talents play the same music we heard last night. But in years to come, we shall look back to the first night we heard a concert by Zino Francescatti and Robert Casadesus as an occasion which will never lose its unique luster. We shall hope that they will be heard frequently in similar programs. There are few mightier displays of the power and wonder of music.

OSKAR KOKOSCHKA
Will talk of his work

Oskar Kokoschka, the Austrian-born painter whose works are now on view at the Phillips Gallery, it due to arrive in Washington at 6:30 tonight. He has come by plane from London for a brief visit, his first to the United States.

An informal reception will be held for him at the Phillips Gallery from 4 to 6 p. m. Tuesday, when the artist will give a short talk about his paintings.

Washington is one of the five cities in this country to have the exhibition, which will be sent to the City Art Museum in St. Louis after its closing at the Phillips on January 17. The show, intiated by James S. Plaut, director of the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston, was first seen there. The two other participating institutions are the Museum of Modern Art in New York and the M. H. De Young Memorial Museum in San Francisco. This is the first representative exhibition of Kokoschka's paintings to be shown in the United States. It spans his entire career.

Born 62 years ago in the Austrain village of Pochlarn, Kokoschka has lived successively in Vienna, Dresden, Berlin, Prague, and London. Badly wounded in the First World War, he recuperated in Switzerland and has since returned there for several visits. He was one of the artists whose work was singled out by Hitler for inclusion in the famous Munich Exhibition of "Degenerate Art" in 1937.

Army Announces Publication of Okinawa Volume

The Army Department yesterday announced publication of the third in its projected 98-volume history of the United States Army in World War II.

This volume, for sale by the Superintendent of Documents for $6, is titled "Okinawa: the Last Battle," and was writeen by Roy E. Appleman, James M. Burns, Russell A. Gugeler and John Stevens of the Army's Historical Division. It was published ahead of other volumes dealing with earlier phases of the war because of circumstances which permitted prompt completion of the manuscript.

The battle for Okinawa, fought in the summer of 1945, resulted in destruction of the Japanese garrison with battle deaths totaling more than 110,000. The historians have drawn their material from personal experience, interviews with participants and the voluminous official files of orders and reports.

'Typical Congressman' Comes to Washington

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

WHEN the Eighty-first Congress assembled last week, slightly puffed on the Democratic side, John R. Walsh was part of the Democratic bulge.

Strong-jawed, with black, curly hair and quick eyes that miss nothing, 35-year-old John Walsh was puzzled at the confusion around him, but still a bit awed.

The young lawyer, from Anderson, Ind., had just solemnly sworn to defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic. He was now a full-fledged member of the House.

"I don't suppose there ever was a greener Congressman elected," he grinned.

John Walsh was no greener than the 116 new members around him, 101 of them Democrats, like himself. In fact, he was above average in background, educational equipment and achievement.

Of all the 116, The Washington Post selected young Walsh as most typical of what happened and the new members elected on November 2, 1948, when the country chose Harry S. Truman and a Democratic House and Senate.

One Answer to Come

HOW did he get here, what were his pledges and how did he propose to carry them out?

What were his hopes for the new Congress and what were his initial reactions to Washington?

How would he feel about it, and how would his pledges square with performance six months hence, when the first session of the Eighty-first Congress was getting ready to adjourn?

The Washington Post found the answers to the first two questions. It hopes to answer the last in an interview at session's end.

John Walsh is as surprised to be here as are most of the other new Democratic members. Actually he was warming up for a "real" run against Indiana's Forest A. Harness, Kokomo Republican, in 1950, when his campaign, as closely modeled after President Truman's own as any that was made, suddenly caught on.

First inkling that he had a good chance to win came when President Truman's slow train through Indiana rolled into Kokomo late last fall.

Forty thousand people jammed Kokomo's main drag and side streets to catch a glimpse of Harry. And John Walsh was standing there at his side.

An Assist From Labor

THE National and State Democratic Committees thought so little of his likely luck against the once formidable Harness that they refused to give him any funds.

Walsh and his campaign manager (now his secretary), Victor Hood, had to "scratch" for finances, but with the help they got from organized labor, hastily organized "Walsh for Congress" clubs and some county chairmen, they plowed and furrowed the district.

Walsh and Hood between them "wore out" two cars. Walsh personally tacked up 3000 posters. With what contributions they picked up, they ran ads in the local newspapers that read like this:

"Win With Walsh.

"Elect a Congressman who will work for you and not against you.

"Peace is our goal, peace is our aim, peace we will accomplish."

The last line was the cue to the Marshall Plan key theme of his campaign. He told the voters it had to be strengthened, and that is his No. 1 Congress pledge.

"We were supposed to be isolationists in the Midwest," explains Walsh. "I knew we were not."

Harness was a prewar isolationist, and for other planks Walsh examined Harness' Eightieth Congress record like a textbook.

Embarrassing Roll Call

INDIANA'S Fifth District is studded with industrial towns, feeling ever more acutely the pinch of the housing shortage.

A syndicated newspaper columnist inadvertently came to the young man's aid by relating the story of how the House Rules Committee "pigeonholed" the Senate-passed public housing bill. He called the roll of Rules committeemen who "sat" on the bill, and Harness was among them.

Thereafter, Walsh called the roll at every rally, pausing for effect when he reached the name of Harness. He made more and better housing legislation his No. 2 pledge. Then he ripped into the powers of the House Rules Committee in a line of attack that was more portentous than he knew. When he sat in his first House Democratic caucus eight nights ago and cast his vote to curb the power of the Rules group, he had redeemed a third promise.

Other points high on his list of campaign commitments:

Repeal of the Taft-Hartley law and substitution of a new law closer to the Wagner Act.

A Federal aid to education bill to provide more schools and equipment, higher pay for teachers and a better elementary education.

He hammered, too, on the price issue, indicting Harness for "inaction." He said he didn't pretend to know the answers, but the Eightieth Congress should have passed at least some of the President's price recommendations even if they turned out to be the wrong answers. "Do something," he argued, was better than "do nothing," even where the remedies missed.

That's approximately his stand on the anti-inflation issue today.

WALSH is no Truman "100 per center."

He will be independent in some of his votes. But after listening to the President's State of the Union message Wednesday he told reporters he thought most of it was "fine." He will oppose health insurance and a few other planks, but, by and large, he intends to "go along with the President."

"I came here on a promise to support whoever was President, when I thought he was right," he said.

Born in Martinsville, Ind., May 22, 1913, son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Walsh, he was educated in the Martinsville public schools and Indiana University Law School.

Though this is his first elective office, Walsh isn't a novice in either politics or the law. He learned law at the feet of the late J. C. McNutt, Paul McNutt's father, a former appellate judge. He worked in his office while going to law school, and later practiced law in his office until 1940. Paul McNutt went into Walsh's district to make two campaign speeches for him, at Kokomo and Huntington.

A county attorney at 21, Walsh served as chief deputy prosecutor for Madison County in 1945 and as probate commissioner the past two years. He resigned the latter post and spent busy weeks winding up his general law practice after his election to the House.

Made Tech Sergeant

HE SERVED on the staff of the State attorney general in 1940 and later took charge of land acquisition for Camp Atterbury, Ind. Then, in April, 1942, he was inducted into the Army, Thirty-fifth Infantry Division. He was a technical sergeant when he went out of the service on a medical discharge the following year.

Starting out in politics during the Democratic Party's lean Hoosier years, he served on the speakers' bureau of the Democratic Central Committee and became Young Democratic National Committeeman for Indiana.

Back in 1940 he married his pretty childhood sweetheart, Helen Stewart. Today they have three sons, 4½-year-old John R. 2d, 22-month-old Stephen, and Timothy, 6 months.

Not only a typical new member, he comes from a typical district. In the last 40 years Indiana's Fifth has gone Democratic about as often as it has voted Republican.

The GOP's Harness had represented the district for 10 years and Walsh thinks this is the start of the Democratic cycle. Harness was reelected two years ago by an 18,000 majority. Walsh beat him in November by a 9300 margin and expects to widen the gap two years hence. Walsh wants it understood that he didn't come to Washington as a one-shot single-termer:

"I am going to work at it, make a career of it."

The Paradox of Force and Freedom

By James Bryant Conant

The following article by President Conant of Harvard is reprinted from the January issue of The Atlantic Monthly with the permission of the publishers. Copyright, 1948, by The Atlantic Monthly Company. All rights reserved.

CAN there be a moral basis for freedom in a world of force? This is one of the ugly questions which disturb many intelligent people at this moment. Can we reconcile the doctrine of military force—the idea of killing men in war—with a moral purpose? As a matter of history, freedom has often emerged from the successful use of force; yet we abominate war as intensely as we love freedom. How are we to resolve this paradox?

I should be ready to maintain that while liberty has repeatedly been gained by war, once won it can be protected only by adherence to those moral principles which were repudiated in its achievement. The distinction between the ethics of war and the ethics of peace, I believe, must be a fundamental postulate of our free society. If this be so, it is of the utmost importance to emphasize the distinction in these confused and gloomy days.

Either history is devoid of meaning or else we must believe that a study of the past will enrich one's understanding of the present. "To be ignorant of what occurred before you were born is to be always a child"—from which it follows that we must read the book of history diligently and scrutinize with the utmost care the events recorded. In that spirit one may venture to approach the difficult problems of reconciling force and freedom in our day by a glance at certain events which took place in England 300 years ago.

The Cambridge Platform

EVERYONE familiar with even the outlines of modern history will recall that the 1640's were a period of civil war in the British Isles. All who have traced the connection between the evolution of democratic institutions in the seventeenth century and the history of the United States will be well aware that the outcome of these wars left a lasting mark on the development of the colonies of North America.

For example, a commission of the Congregational and Unitarian churches of this country recently commemorated the tercentenary of the adoption of the Cambridge Platform. This document was essentially a statement of the local independence of the churches of the Puritan colonies. It was a manifestation of a current running strongly both in old England and in New England as to the importance of local control and initiative in matters of religion.

Ambitious claims have been made that this platform was basic in the development of the cultural pattern of the United States. Certainly we are all aware of the significance of the twin doctrines of local responsibility and local initiative, and even the members of other Protestant denominations can give due credit to those early Congregationalists who proclaimed the independence of each one of the New England churches.

Any celebration, however, which rejoices in the influence of the New Englanders of three centuries ago must likewise recognize the role of force in the drama which was being enacted in the 1640's. The tramp of Cromwell's soldiers echoes through the years. For just when the learned ministers were writing the Cambridge Platform in New England the genius of Oliver Cromwell and the discipline of his red-coated New Model Army were settling the claim of rival church parties for the organization of the Protestant religion in the Anglo-Saxon world.

A second civil war had broken out in April, 1648; the Royalists defeated in the earlier struggle were allies with the Scotch and the discontented Presbyterians. If this strange alliance should prove successful, there was a strong possibility that a combination of Scotch and English Presbyterians would control the form of church government in both Great Britain and the colonies. But the victory by Cromwell and his followers at Preston in August, 1648, eliminated this danger. The Congregationalists of New England and the Independent Party in old England were made secure.

Out of Harsh Soil

THE relationship between force and freedom in the seventeenth-century history of the English-speaking people is evident. Without the victories in the first civil war there would have been no possibility of a Cambridge Platform; a triumphant King would have seen to that. If the Presbyterians had won at Preston there would have been a prompt suppression of independent churches at home and in the colonies.

But it was more than the victories on the battlefield which firmly established in a relatively few months the "New England way of life." Between the time when the Cambridge Platform was adopted by the ministers and enacted by the General Court, the influence of Cromwell and his soldiers had become literally overpowering. It is the irony of history that the arbitrary action of Cromwell's officers in Pride's Purge of Parliament in December, 1648, and Cromwell's subsequent dissolution of what remained, the so-called Rump Parliament, made secure a rule which was one of the sources of American freedom. For Cromwell's Independents saw eye to eye with the New England men.

The Cambridge Platform was certainly something more than a passing resolution of a handful of stout church rebels only because of the continuing victories of an extraordinary army, and perhaps only because of the arbitrary action of the same army against a representative assembly. Just as in England religious toleration grew out of a period of military dictatorship of "godly men," so our liberties in this country can claim to have drawn nourishment from the same harsh soil. Cromwell's soldiers fought for freedom of the Parliament from the King, freedom of all Christians from the Pope and from the Anglican Bishops. Cromwell's officers and men later manipulated the political scene and coerced the nation on behalf of independent church government and the consequent independence of a great variety of sects.

The problem of reconciling force and freedom by an historian reviewing the seventeenth century has a familiar modern ring. One can envy the men of 300 years ago on one point at least—they were spared some of the more disturbing doubts which three centuries have forced on the Western World. One can feel the sincerity of Cromwell's remarks when, describing one of his great battles, he said, "And the Lord made the enemy stubble unto our swords."

There is no evidence that aside from the Quakers the pious people of England or New England in those days had any scruples about the use of force, provided it was used by them. Whether the doubts which now assail so many honest men represent a slackening of our religious faith or a quickening of our sensitivity as human beings or a better appreciation of the Christian message is a question I leave to the theologians and preachers of this day.

Rule of Armed Saints

IF ONE may venture to express a judgment on the actors of the great drama of the Puritan rebellion, I should say that Cromwell and his followers are to be praised for having fought well in both the civil wars. Indeed, I fail to see how anyone who rejoices in our liberties could well maintain the contrary. The behavior of the army leaders after the close of the second civil war is another story.

The verdict of history must be that they failed to execute a plan by which an orderly development of a broadly based government would be possible in England; they failed in spite of Cromwell's conservative instincts and his prayerful attempts to find a constitutional basis for his regime. The considered judgment of all who believe in the Western definition of democracy and freedom must be that they were wrong to establish a military dictatorship even of godly men; in short the rule of armed saints is to be condemned on both pragmatic and moral grounds.

History is full of examples of earnest men so dedicated to a cause that they did not scruple to use violence as an adjunct to political action. To their minds the issues between themselves and their opponents were of such a nature as to justify the application of the rules of war even in times of peace. Fanatics who believe they are divinely led, or that history is on their side, usually maintain that the end justifies the means. Hence an admixture of violence and treachery in affairs of state is for them the equivalent of the taking of life on a field of battle.

Any unwillingness to admit the validity of the moral distinction between war and peace is at once exploited by all apologists of dictatorships—past, present, or future. At the present moment those who believe that nothing can be worse than war are eagerly sought as allies by those who believe that nothing can be worse than our American practice of democracy.

The two join hands in pointing the finger of scorn at the apparent paradox that a nation founded on the principle of the sacredness of human life is ready to secure its liberties by war if need be. The one group bases its case on the consistent application of Christian teachings, the other on equally consistent denial of the Christian ethics. Yet the Pacifist and the Communist unite in exposing the logical inconsistency of the traditional American attitude toward force and freedom.

The Totalitarian Premise

TODAY as in the past the vast majority of the citizens of the United States, while abhorring war, nevertheless believe that it is not always wrong. They have a deep-seated conviction, however, that war is always totally different morally from peace. The consequences of abandoning this illogical position by proclaiming that fighting is never justified are all too clear.

If we were to lay down our arms as a matter of Christian principle, and as a Nation take an eternal vow of nonresistance, those who feel otherwise could hardly fail to accelerate the course of history as they see it. From their point of view they would be negligent in their duty if they failed to eliminate the Christian basis for our brand of democratic freedom.

I have not the slightest fear that we shall adopt the doctrine of nonresistance. I am not so certain, however, that we might not adopt the exactly opposite course of action. And if we did, we would very shortly destroy our freedom.

If we became sufficiently oppressed by the logical inconsistency of our emphasis on the distinction between war and peace, we might repudiate the paradox by accepting the premise of the totalitarians that at all times the end justifies the means. Once we had gone over to their position, the doctrine of a preventive war, so-called, against a potential enemy would be quite compatible with the philosophy of the Nation. But so, too, would be strong-armed methods at the polls, intimidation of a legislature, even a coup d'etat and political assassinations.

The Kremlin's Dream

THE few who have been flirting with the idea of a preventive war have failed to see the implications of their position.

Britain Still Clings to Its Lord Crumpets

By Giles Playfair

Novelist, playwright and former London barrister

"ENGLAND is so changed, you'll be surprised," I was warned in letters from my relatives shortly before I returned, after an absence of many years, to my native country.

Eventually, I was surprised—but not to find England so changed. England has reverted to the same country I knew before the war—with Lord Crumpet at the top of the social scale and Jim Black dutifully looking up to him. Britain's class system remains firmly intact. The long-promised—or feared—social revolution has so far failed to come off.

There are actually more than two social classes in Britain—there are at least four. But to show how the system works, one can make a simple equation by letting X equal the upper class and Y the lower.

In effect, X says to Y: "I am your superior, not because I am necessarily richer or more successful than you or even a more honest or laudable character, but because I am better born—a fact which you may recognize, for example, by my accent. Therefore, you must treat me deferentially and permit me, without envy or complaint on your part, to enjoy certain social privileges denied to you."

In essence, the system is merely an attitude of mind. If it is to function properly, it is necessary (a) that X should have the means to live like an X, which is apt to be a more expensive business than living like a Y, and (b) that Y should be a good sport about the arrangement and agree to abide by the rules, that is, to "know his place."

When the war began, there were solid grounds for believing that neither of these conditions could conceivably survive.

'Trade' Muscled In

IN THE first place, Y's acceptance of the concept of the class system was ultimately dependent upon his faith that the topmost X's—the hereditary aristocracy—had by birthright a genuine claim to be considered exalted. But these topmost X's had emerged from the first World War so weakened financially that they had only managed to continue as a class by joining forces with lesser beings whom they would have previously rejected as distressingly unsuitable company.

During the between-wars period, the distinction between the old landed nobility and the new nobility of soap, breweries, chemicals, motor cars, etc., had virtually disappeared. Now it looked as if this liberalizing process would go still further and make an absurd anachronism of any idea that an hereditary aristocracy, worthy of the name, existed at all.

Secondly, it was widely assumed that the electorate would return the socialists to power as soon as they had an opportunity to vote again. Such an act, it was felt, would spell ruin for the X's.

Besides, the army had been democratized. It was a conscript army, and commissions could not be obtained by virtue alone of a cultivated accent, an "old school tie" and knowing the "right people." They had to be earned by skill and achievement. Men in significant numbers could be elevated above their former social superiors, bringing about a reversal in the positions of the X's and the Y's in many cases.

Wartime Leveling

DURING the war, the old class barriers began to crumble under the impact of dangers and hardships commonly shared. When the war ended, a Labor government was duly elected by an overwhelming majority. Conditions were ripe for the social revolution. But it didn't happen.

The delay must be only temporary, for economically the class system is doomed, and sooner or later it must disappear. Nevertheless, at the moment it seems as firmly ensconced as it ever did in my remembrance.

Passing Buckingham Palace in a taxi, I saw a number of topmost X's emerging from some function or other—the women in startlingly elongated editions of the New Look, the men in amazingly old-look morning coats and Edwardian, gray top hats. They were being watched admiringly by a crowd of Y's patiently herded behind a police cordon.

I had a glimpse of the other side of the picture soon afterwards. The hall porter at my hotel told me he had been employed at this same hotel all his working life, except for intervals caused by the two World Wars. "Yes, sir!" he said, "they tried to keep me out of the army last time—but I got back all right. Needed a commission to do it, though."

He had risen to the rank of colonel, but plainly he thought it only proper that he return after the war to his old job as hall porter.

A Tone of Voice

I FOUND the most extreme example within the precincts of the newly nationalized railways. I was at Victoria Station one Saturday amidst a dense crowd of aspiring holiday makers. There was a queue for the Brighton train stretching beyond the station entrance, and few had a chance of getting on.

Suddenly, a man approached the guard at the closed barrier. He was curtly ordered to go to the end of the queue, but he had the courage of his effrontery. He wasn't particularly large or opulent-looking, and he did not attempt to bribe the guard. What he did do was to remark in his self-assured, let's-have-no-nonsense-about-it, unmistakable X's voice. "I have a first-class ticket."

The statement meant nothing, for many in the queue were also holders of first-class tickets. But the voice meant everything. "Oh, of course, sir," the guard said apologetically, opening the gate to let him through, ahead of all the others.

I could give plenty of other instances of the class system in operation. I saw it at Lord's cricket ground when one of the England-Australia test matches was being played. They arouse the same popular interest as the World Series. The X's were in full possession of all the best seating accommodations—not because of their superior purchasing power, but because of their superior connections. For Lord's is still run, exactly as it was before the war, as a large but nevertheless exclusive club.

It is against all practical reason for the class system to have survived. Under the Labor government, the Y's at the bottom of the social structure—the working class—are politically and economically better off than ever before in British history, whereas the X's at the pinnacle—the aristocracy—have never been worse off.

Their individual wealth has been largely taxed out of existence. The only rich people in England—rich in the sense of having money to lavish on luxuries—are the so-called "spivs" or "wide boys," those who earn huge sums out of some more or less illicit business and also manage to dodge the income tax collector. The "wide boys," incidentally, have not yet been admitted to the ranks of the aristocracy.

Illusion of Grandeur

HOW then can this impoverished aristocracy afford, in terms either of money or coupons, to maintain its prewar social status? The answer is that it can't.

Such trappings as I saw outside Buckingham Palace are illusory. The morning coats and top hats, stored away at the beginning of the war, have been taken out of moth balls and on close inspection look considerably the worse for age. The limousines—with chauffeurs—have been procured for the occasion from a hire-service garage.

All the Lord and Lady Crumpets really have left is their arrogance and courage. Their material grandeur is mainly pretense.

Here is the key to the riddle—the pretense is a part of a futile national attempt to prove that Britain still exists as it did before the war. The British people are engaged in a determined if subconscious effort to live in their past.

Such an attitude has arisen from a profound dissatisfaction with present living conditions and from a fear of looking ahead.

One can find evidence of it in current literature, movies and broadcast programs which are predominantly nostalgic or escapist, in private conversation which tends strongly toward reminiscence, in political speeches that are frequently quite unrelated to reality.

As long as this national make-believe continues, Britain's social revolution will be delayed.

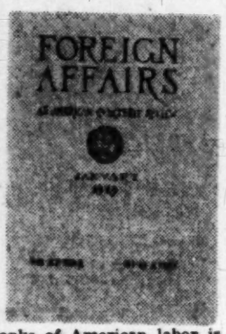
AFL's Dubinsky Analyzes World Labor Split

By David Dubinsky

The following is excerpted with permission from an article in the January issue of the quarterly, Foreign Affairs. Mr. Dubinsky is president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, a vice president of the American Federation of Labor and is AFL labor consultant to the United Nations.

THE camp of labor, like the community of nations, is today in the throes of a deep crisis. No doubt the discord in the United Nations has had its influence here. But it would be a mistake to say that the conflicts within world labor parallel those which are rending the United Nations.



In the World Federation of Trade Unions, the French, Italian and Chinese delegates are lined up against the British. Only the organization which is second in strength in the ranks of American labor is represented. Most of Latin American labor, recently organized into the Inter-American Confederation of Labor, is likewise outside the federation; only the Confederacion de Trabajadores, which shows a Communist tendency under the leadership of Lombardo Toledano, owes the WFTU allegiance . . .

The WFTU has acted primarily as a political body. It has displayed very strong bias against the democratic countries, and has championed totalitarian Russia and its satellites with intense and consistent partisanship. It has shut its eyes to the destruction of the workers' rights and labor standards in Czechoslovakia and the Balkan countries.

Because of Russian hostility to the Marshall Plan, it has refused to act even on the most vital of all economic issues facing the European workers—the reconstruction of the continent. In the United Nations Economic and Social Council, it has leveled sundry accusations against various non-Slavic countries. But it has adamantly refused to support the proposal of the AFL for a survey by the International Labor Organization of the extent of slave labor and the destruction of workers' rights in some lands—a problem which goes to the heart of trade union interests.

Its publications have been unceasingly vituperative toward the United States and Britain. In Greece, the Middle East, Korea and Japan, it has intervened to oppose Britain and the United States and to give fanatic support to Russian foreign policy . . .

TUC Asks Dissolution

PACED by the International Transport Workers Federation, practically all the trade secretariats have officially rejected every invitation to affiliate with the World Federation. Last September the issue came to a head when such powerful bodies as the metal workers, coal miners, transport workers and others in joint meeting at Paris turned down the WFTU proposal for affiliation and established an International Coordinating Council of their own.

This is undoubtedly the most crushing defeat the World Federation has received. The trade secretariats are the bloodstream of a living international labor organization; without them no labor body can deserve the name international or function on a world scale . . .

Under these circumstances, and in line with the decision of the Margate Congress, the General Council of the British Trades Union Congress decided, on October 27, 1948, to call on the World Federation to dissolve. The resolution recognized the fundamental differences which existed on questions of policy and organization and the impossibility of preventing the intrusion of politics. The final word of the general council was: "In the event of the World Federation of Trade Unions refusing to agree to the suspension of its activities, a withdrawal from the World Federation of Trade Unions must follow."

This is the end. With the TUC getting out, the CIO should find it extremely difficult to stay in. The trade union movements of the Low Countries and Scandinavia could hardly continue affiliation after a departure by the British. The Communists still control the majority of the trade union organizations in France and Italy; but the upshot of the split in the WFTU is likely to be a strengthening of the independent, non-Communist trade unions like the Force Ouvriere . . .

Fundamental Differences

THE EXPERIENCE with the WFTU confronts world labor with a number of vital questions involving fundamental policy, everyday practice and long-range perspective.

The basic reason for AFL opposition to the creation of the World Federation was that the trade unions in the nontotalitarian countries were fundamentally different in nature and purpose from those under totalitarian regimes and, therefore, could not function together in one international labor body. This had been clear to members of the American Federation of Labor for some time.

In democratic countries, trade unions are voluntary institutions. They are organs of large sections of the working people, grouped according to their jobs and skill, not according to political belief, and are dedicated primarily to the defense and promotion of the rights and interests of labor. In this capacity, the trade unions are free agencies which can and often do exercise considerable influence on governmental policies and legislation. Free trade unions are instruments for making democratic governments more responsive to the wishes and interests of great masses of the people.

In totalitarian countries, on the other hand, the process is completely reversed. Instead of the unions helping to determine the policies of the government, the governments determine the course of the unions. The trade unions are instruments of the government—used by it to impose its will on the masses of the people. This was the unbridgeable difference between the Nazi Labor Front and the trade unions in the United States, Britain, Scandinavia and other democratic countries. This continues to be the unbridgeable chasm between the Communist unions and the labor unions in our country . . .

The experience with the WFTU has brought into bold relief the folly of attempted cooperation by free trade union movements with the state-controlled company unions of Russia and her satellites. Such cooperation serves only as a convenient avenue for Communist infiltration and capture of free trade unions. In France, Italy, Latin America, Japan, Korea, southeastern Asia and the Middle East, the World Federation has been of inestimable aid to Communist agents in penetrating the ranks of labor, seizing control of labor organizations, and poisoning the minds of the workers with pro-Soviet and antidemocratic propaganda . . .

Uncomfortable Position

NOT AN INSTANCE can be cited where the association of democratic trade unions with state-controlled unions in the World Federation has been of any use in persuading the totalitarian workers' organizations to bring pressure to bear on their dictatorial governments for the improvement of labor standards, the extension of human rights in domestic affairs, or the pursuit of peaceful policies in international relations. Never has the WFTU assisted any struggling free democratic union in any country. On the contrary, this collaboration has greatly facilitated the work of the Communist Quislings as instruments of Russian imperialism.

Moreover, so long as the British Trades Union Congress and the American CIO remain in the World Federation they are in the very uncomfortable position of seeming to sponsor, in the international field, the very practices which they bitterly fight at home. Both organizations have hitherto denied this. But it is solely because of their association with the Communist unions in the World Federation that they have been lukewarm to the idea of an energetic international drive to smash the Communist campaign against the ERP. Arthur Deakin's proposal at the Margate Congress to dissolve the WFTU marks the beginning of the end of this unhappy collaboration.

It has been argued by some that if the AFL had affiliated with the World Federation, the democratic forces would have been strong enough to prevent it from becoming a tool of Russian foreign policy, and might even have given control to the free trade unions. I cannot claim such powers of miraculous healing for the AFL, despite the encouraging expansion of its international activities in recent years. The Rome sessions of the executive committee of the World Federation proved again that in any organization in which the Russians participate, criticism by democratic organizations can, at best, result only in frustrating and dangerous compromises which leave all the trump cards in the hands of the Communists. It is not possible for a devout Communist to make a concession in good faith . . .

Continental Labor Weak

A NEW and genuine international federation of free trade unions is in the making, though we cannot yet set a date for its birth. The Russians and their satellite unions will, of course, resist such a realignment to the bitter end. They will continue to exploit the name "World Federation of Trade Unions" to the limit, even though its membership is narrowed to include only Russian-controlled unions.

In counteracting these Communist attacks, the role of the British TUC will be decisive in Europe, for continental labor is still divided and weak, especially in France and Italy. The reviving German trade union movement is, naturally, weakened by its very setting in a vanquished, partitioned and occupied country. And American labor is still divided, though one can hope that the increased unity of action abroad will stimulate organic unity between the AFL and the CIO at home . . .

Whether the Communists call their world organization and central bureau Profintern or WFTU, whether they call it Comintern or Cominform, they never lessen the activity of their armies of agents, propagandists, party members and fellow travellers. Whether a Communist Party in any country calls itself by that name or some other name, whether a "front" organization calls itself the League Against War and Fascism one day, or the American Peace Mobilization the next, the essential characteristic of all these organizations as segments of an international movement for Bolshevik world domination does not change.

The lesson must be reiterated: the attempt to work with Communists is futile folly. The lesson applies to trade unions, to other organizations and to individuals. When working with Communists for a good cause we hurt that cause, because it is sure to be used by them as an instrument for achieving their own different aims. This is confirmed by Stalin himself in his "Foundations of Leninism" when he says: "A revolutionist [Communist] may sponsor a reform because he sees in it a means for linking up constitutional action with unconstitutional action, because he feels he can make use of it as a screen behind which he can strengthen his clandestine work." Collaboration by trade unionists and liberals with Communists serves only to provide them with a means of deception and with prestige which they subsequently exploit for party purposes.

Gold Flows To Italy's Open Mart

By Frank Brutto

Associated Press Staff Writer

ROME, Jan. 8.—Symptomatic of Europe's sick paper money is a growing gold fever that has brought a stream of the valuable stuff to Italy's open markets.

Since the recent establishment of these markets, Italy has become an important center for private dealings in gold.

Epicarmo Corbino, economist and former Treasury Minister in Premier Alcide de Gasperi's government, writing in Italy's weekly Oggi, said the "fever" is spreading. There is no prospect of its abatement, he added, "because there is no definite will in the world to return to a healthy monetary system."

Even if there were, he said, it would take a long time to persuade people to change their habits. The confidence they had for 100 years—1816 to 1914—was violently shaken by the First World War, which saw collapse of the German mark, the ruble, the Austro-Hungarian crown. Distrust was confirmed by currency inflations that have followed World War II.

In Italy's open markets today, as in the ancient days of Amsterdam, Genoa, Frankfurt and Venice, agents come with their little, heavy sacks. Daily quotations are posted for gold, silver and hard money such as dollars, British pounds and Swiss francs. Gold and silver dealers—now licensed—no longer need put up such signs as "Orologi (watches, bought and sold," with the first three letters—oro, gold—in red or otherwise emphasized.

Growth of the Italian gold market, Corbino said, owes much to Italy's geographic position near the traditionally gold-trading countries of the East and neighboring France and Switzerland.

In France, the habit of hoarding and hiding little bags of coins under stones is reviving. Switzerland's neutrality, Corbino said, had "enormously" increased her gold reserves.

Specialists of the gold network include veteran Italo-Swiss-French frontier runners in the shadows of the Matterhorn, Mount Blanc and the Little St. Bernard Pass, and big city graduates of Europe's black money markets, who have developed the continent's sharpest eyes for spotting foreigners.

Their whispered remark—in Rome—was and still it: "Wanna change, good price."

However, the Italian success in the gold market, said Corbino, probably would not have been crowned were it not for "the curious attitude of our gold merchants, who have known how to combine their black market abilities, which tranquilly ignored money laws, with the mentality created by the habit of eluding Fascist laws on money exports."

Sweden Digs in Against Total War

By Ake Malmstroem

Associated Press Staff Writer

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 8.—The Swedes, uncomfortably close to Russia and feeling the growing world tenseness, have not slackened their efforts to protect themselves against a total war.

During World War II, many fortifications were blasted into the innumerable islands and reefs off the rocky coasts of Sweden. Mountains are still the mainstay of defense against the new weapons.

The Swedish mountains are not high, but they are mostly granite. Most of the cities are built on rock. Gray granite is everywhere. Thus it is relatively easy to put Swedish industry and public utilities in bombproof shelters.

Many of the wartime shelters are now used as garages, storage space and repair shops. The Stockholm shelters are a good source of income for the city, which has let them to private enterprise.

Secrecy Is Flexible

THE BLASTING of mountain halls for industries began during the war and now is being organized on even greater scale. A committee was formed in 1948 to plan for the sheltering of strategic industries in the mountains, and much already has been done, although little publicized.

Naturally, Sweden is saying nothing about what it may be doing in the building of coastal shelters for its new 10,000-ton cruisers, its submarines and other naval craft, its torpedo batteries, forts and warplanes.

But secrecy is less rigid for industrial mountain halls and storage tanks, especially for oil, which are blasted into coastal rocks in many places. The new tanks are protected against air attacks and are almost fireproof.

Several important plants producing weapons, ammunition, airplanes and motors already have moved at least some of their most vital machinery into the mountains.

Walls Are Decorated

A TYPICAL example is the Bolinder-Munktell airplane motor and tractor factory at Torshaella in south central Sweden. Outside the mountain, one sees only a red shack, concealing a hole in the rock. A hallway leads to a number of naves, each 88 yards long, 16.5 yards wide and 6 yards high.

The walls are painted and enlivened with photographic murals and niches with artificial flower pots. Temperature and moisture are regulated automatically and the machines are driven by electricity.

These mountain halls are not depressing for the workers; they are cleaner and healthier than old type factories. The workers feel safe from enemy air attacks, even from poison gas and atom bombs.

There are other mountain factories—at least a half dozen on a grand scale—but Bolinder-Munktell is the prototype. The blasting for it started in 1941.

Public utilities, which in Sweden are owned almost exclusively by the state and communities, also are placed in the mountains. There is a special government committee for such installations, and a community which plans to build a waterworks or a power station in rock is given a grant from the state for the additional costs.

However, it is not expensive to build in the mountains, since one does not have to buy an expensive building site and it is easy to keep an even temperature. Further, there are savings in bricks, roofing and other materials needed for a finished building.

Rock-ribbed Archives

GOTHENBURG, Sweden's second city, now is building water and electrical plants in its mountains with the aid of government grants totaling about $850,000.

Stockholm is regarded as one of the few targets in Sweden for an atom bomb attack, and hence the capital is working hard to find protection in its mountains. A subway system is being constructed and large shelters blasted for the trams, public utilities and the population. The new city archives building stands with its eight lowest floors in a rock in the center of the city.

The largest building in Stockholm is the new Southside Hospital, which dominates the southern approach to the capital. It has its own powerhouse, naturally built into rock, and has large shelters for 2500 blasted into the granite.

These shelters have 24 feet of solid rock on top and are equipped with two operating theaters. The powerhouse is still deeper down in the rock.

Its Very Success Is 'Bankrupting' Blood Bank

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

THE DISTRICT Red Cross blood bank last week observed its first anniversary of peacetime operation—with refrigerator space for your blood.

Main reason for the continuing need for more blood, officials said, is success rather than failure of the regional program. Bearing this out are records showing collections of 16,423 pint bottles of whole blood from donors here since January 5, 1948.

But that same blood has been going out, daily, to hospitals throughout the Greater Washington area to sustain life in the injured and ill, in cases of burns, injuries, childbirth, anemias, leukemias, amputations and shock. Too frequently, and particularly for the past three weeks, the bank has had to "juggle stocks" to meet emergency needs.

"We've actually just been scraping along, supplying pressing needs," said Dr. Kenneth R. Nelson, physician in charge of technical direction of the blood center. "Often, we've had to draw on supplies we'd already given one hospital to meet the more urgent needs of another."

The blood bank, he said, should maintain a minimum reserve stock of 225 to 250 pints, sufficient for two days' distribution. But since before Christmas, the center "has been filling tomorrow's orders with today's donations, and just getting by at that," he said.

Leading Regional Center

OF COURSE, the anxiety is mingled with some pride. For example, Dr. Nelson said, the donation center at 1730 E st. nw. has led the Nation in numbers of donors since last May, when the District blood bank branched out to cover the Greater Washington area and became the National Red Cross regional blood bank.

And, in November, the regional center first took the lead over the 15 other regional centers in total volume of blood being collected, through fixed centers and mobile operating units.

What that has meant to Washington life and health will never fully be known, officials said. But they do have case histories crediting one pint of donated blood here with saving an infant's life, and others where as much as 40 to 50 pints pulled leukemia victims over humps in their battles against the blood disorder.

Little Michael Rector, whose burn case has made medical history, has been helped in his fight against burns covering 70 per cent of his body by the blood of unknown donors to the bank. And mothers who have walked the "valley of the shadow of death" in childbirth—losing as much as four precious pints of blood in hemorrhage—have been saved here.

Though most of the lifesaving fluid going to hospitals is whole blood, there have been notable exceptions. Chief case in point was fresh plasma supplied the 4-year-old Rector boy at Casualty Hospital. His burns poured out his blood fluid, but there was little loss to his red cell count. So for his needs, the cells were centrifuged out of fresh whole blood, and the plasma only was transfused into his veins.

Of the 16,423 bottles of blood collected here in the year, officials said, all but 400 pints were distributed as whole blood. The smaller number went out as fresh plasma, chiefly for use in severe burn cases.

Secrets Still Elusive

BLOOD has been the age-old mystery of mankind. Even today, doctors say relatively little is known of its vast powers. Ancient Egyptians bathed in it, in fruitless quest of the fountain of youth. Roman spectators drank it from the veins of fallen gladiators, in futile efforts to imbue themselves with a fighter's courage.

Little was known of the composition or function of blood until such discoveries as its circulation, by Harvey in 1628, and its four main groups, by Landsteiner in 1901. Discovery of the Rh factor in blood didn't come till 1940, when Dr. Karl Landsteiner and Dr. Alexander Weiner found it in rhesus (Rh) monkeys, and later in human blood.

Blood transfusions didn't wait for medical science. As early as the fourteenth century they were tried, with both human and animal blood, generally with fatal consequences to both donors and recipients, records show. And even as late as 75 years ago a French physician, reporting on 374 transfusions, summarized that such practice was dangerous.

Washington physicians of the older generation recall the drama of early transfusion work. All such transfusions were direct, often with over-and-under technique, the blood of the donor pumping directly into the veins of the recipient. In a later modification, the transfusions were made with blood syringes.

"A blood transfusion was a tense thing to watch in those days," says Rear Admiral George B. Dowling, M. C., USN, ret., who now is deputy administrator of the national blood program of the American Red Cross.

But that was before World War I, and the discovery that sodium citrate could be added to whole blood to keep it from coagulating (lumping), and that dextrose could be added as a nutrient, or blood cell food. With such refinements, physicians found they could keep blood several hours before use in indirect transfusions.

Advent of Dried Plasma

WORLD WAR II gave blood study the impetus that brought transfusions to today's degree of perfection. Techniques were perfected, largely through special studies at Harvard, which made it possible to keep whole blood fresh for 28 days (21 days is today's safety factor limit). And plasma, it was found, could be dried and sent to the world battlefronts.

The Red Cross first entered the blood picture in 1937 when an Augusta, Ga., obstetrician asked the local Red Cross chapter to provide donors for his postdelivery hemorrhage cases. The mercy work rapidly spread to other chapters throughout the country.

Because of this history, and the fact that the Red Cross was set up on a national scale, the organization was chosen to handle the war blood-donation program. That the Red Cross collected 13,326,242 pints of blood as the free gift of Americans to their fighting men attests the scope of its operations.

The war's end brought a decline in such needs, but a realization that such a lifesaving measure was also needed in peacetime. And the present national blood program was inaugurated.

The District Red Cross, which had stood out in war for its blood collections, was among the Nation's first chapters to enter the peacetime plan. It opened its blood bank doors January 5, 1948, but did not merge with the Red Cross regional plan until May. The Rochester regional blood bank, caring for a large section of New York State, was first to set itself up on the larger scale, on January 12, 1948.

Van Tours Large Area

THE DISTRICT blood bank's operations center around its main activities at the E st. center and its mobile collection team. The latter, with a well-equipped van, sets up blood receiving stations periodically in large and small communities in the Greater Washington area.

The mobile van and its corps of trained workers goes to such points as Fredericksburg, Winchester, Warrenton and Leesburg, in Virginia; to Martinsburg, W. Va., and to Hagerstown, Md. And hospitals within the collection area are recipients of blood distributions from the fixed center.

District Red Cross officials report that the center meets the total blood needs of the following 15 hospitals: Mount Alto Veterans', Children's, Georgetown, George Washington, Glenn Dale, Episcopal, Adams, Burwell, Casualty, Columbia, Homeopathic, Soldier's Home, St. Elizabeths, Sibley and Emergency.

In addition, they said, the center meets any request of the Navy Medical Center, Bethesda, Md., over and above what its own blood bank processes, and the emergency need of Garfield, Providence, Freedmen's, Gallinger and Doctors Hospitals.

In the mobile unit territory, they said, the blood bank meets total needs of hospitals in Arlington and Fairfax Counties and Alexandria, Va., and in Prince Georges County, Md., as well as emergency needs of hospitals in Montgomery County, Md. It also meets total blood needs of hospitals as far away as Fredericksburg and Winchester, Va., Martinsburg, W. Va., and Hagerstown, Md.

Goal Almost Doubled

DONORS are all volunteers, and are obtained from Government groups, industrial groups, and, in fact, any employed group in Washington with 100 or more workers. Basic policy of the program, officials said, is that blood is a product that cannot be duplicated in manufacture, and that even if a person could afford it, not enough would be available for purchase.

But, they said, once the American public becomes fully educated to the need for blood, it will willingly donate.

Originally, area needs were estimated at 30,000 pints of blood a year. Now that the program is under way and physicians are making more use of blood's benefits to their patients, the over-all estimate has been revised upward to 50,000 pints.

The local program is geared to the national one, which seeks full coverage of the whole Nation's blood needs within three to five years.

A final purpose of the blood program has had little support from the regional blood bank here, largely because the bank has been expanding distribution as fast as collections increased. When full distribution service is reached, however, the District blood bank may be able to turn over a surplus to laboratories under contract with the National Red Cross for further research into blood values.

Medical research has already shown that blood can be broken down into many promising derivatives. These include serum albumin, for shock, certain kidney diseases and other conditions; immune serum globulin, for modification or prevention of measles; antihemophilic globulin, for treatment of hemophiliacs (bleeders); fibrin films and thrombin, for use in brain surgery, and red-cell suspensions, for treating certain anemic conditions.

Priority Need Unfilled

THE DISTRICT CHAPTER is anxious to do its part in this research phase of the national program, officials said. But first come hospital needs, which are requiring an increasing number of donors.

Though most donors are obtained through employed groups, a person need not wait for solicitation, they pointed out. Individuals can call for an appointment to give blood by dialing DI. 5042, or by visiting the center at 1730 E st. nw.

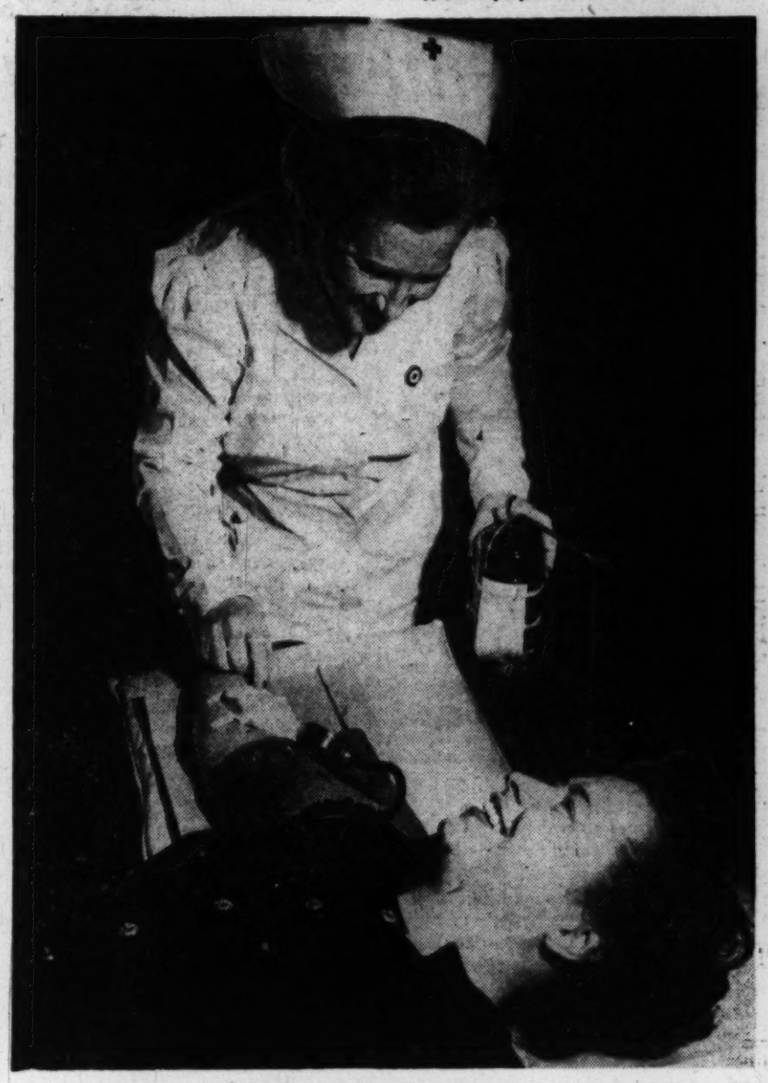
The blood center is open for donations from Monday through Friday, 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., and on Monday evenings from 7 to 9 p. m. The donating process takes a leisurely half-hour, with five to six minutes required for the actual blood-letting.

Donors must be 21 to 59 years old, with exceptions with special consent for persons 18 to 21. No distinction is made for race or sex, and donations are limited for each individual to five in any one year, with an eight-week interval between each.

A physician and registered nurses supervise the work, and the Red Cross maintains a snack bar there to refresh the donors.

As one Red Cross worker said:

"The donor seldom leaves here without the feeling that he has done something big for others."



Blood donors spend a leisurely and not at all unpleasant half-hour at the Red Cross center at 1730 E st. nw., but the actual blood-letting takes only a fraction of that time. Mrs. R. F. Mundy of 1275 Brentwood rd. ne., the donor, and Mrs. Teresa Thompson, the nurse, demonstrate the process

Navajos Have A Rare Streak Of Good Luck

By Robert A. Barnes
Associated Press Staff Writer

GALLUP, N. Mex., Jan. 8.—The Navajo Indians are enjoying better times this winter—but it's just temporary prosperity.

The tribesmen have prospered from the highest lamb prices in their history, a pinon nut crop which has brought them many thousands of dollars and newly instituted relief payments by the Federal Government. But prospects for permanent improvement of the Navajo lot are little better than in previous years. The lamb prices and pinon crop are just plain luck.

Although Nation-wide publicity loosed a deluge of food and clothing from a sympathetic American public last winter, Congress has not enacted a long-range program to lift its charges out of illiteracy and disease. Their over-all needs are the same as ever—education, hospitalization and adequate relief for the blind, aged and crippled, and economic development.

TWO main points stand out on the favorable side of the ledger in the tribe's 80-year battle to become independent citizens without strings:

1—Along with other Indians in New Mexico and Arizona, the Navajos voted for the first time in a general election last November.

2—The reservation Indians have progressed in their fight for Social Security benefits. They still have a long way to go before they will be on a par with their white brothers, however.

Navajo sheepmen received an average of 20 cents a pound for their lambs last fall—the best ever. Last year's average price was 16 cents.

For 2½ months, entire Navajo families took to the hills to gather the first pinón nut crop in four years. It was the first big crop in 10 years and amounted almost to a cash bonus for the Navajos.

The Navajo school situation is still, in large part, a story of unfilled promises. Judge N. B. Johnson, president of the American Indian Congress, said on December 14 that the "Navajo Indian situation reflects a tragic story of neglect by the Congress of the United States."

Johnson said that only one Navajo child in four ever goes to school. His figures show that of 20,000 school-age youngsters, only 5000 can be accommodated in schools, some 2000 of them off the reservation.

The voting privilege was not widely used. Roughly 3000 Navajos registered; officials estimate that few more than a third voted.

Bootleggers' Harvest

THE pinon harvest is big business in the Southwest. During the harvest—from frost to snow—jewelry workers lagged in their production and woolen Navajo rugs were in short supply.

Some Indians are paid in credit for the nuts, but most take the hard cash. As usual the bootleggers get a share. Federal law forbids sale of alcoholic liquors to Indians. Lately this law has been the subject of increasing debate.

One side argues that the Indians pay high bootleg prices, drink the liquor hastily to avoid being caught, and consequently go berserk. On the other side are those who say the liquor ban could and should be enforced and the bootleggers eliminated. Both sides agree on one thing—enforcement is poor at present.

Here's the Social Security situation:

An agreement is now in effect by which the Indian Office pays assistance claims, which are processed by the welfare departments of New Mexico and Arizona. The agreement implies that when Indian Service assistance funds are depleted, the States will take over payments. The money is expected to run out about March 1, but congressional delegations have indicated they will seek additional funds from Congress so that there will be no need to call on the States.

The Navajo Agency has paid out just over a half million dollars in direct relief to Indians from an emergency fund authorized by Congress last February. An additional million dollars is being used for work relief.

What does this relief amount to for the individual Indian? In December, the Navajo service still paid only one third of budgeted needs. Thus, an Indian family needing $60 a month for food, clothing and household needs received $20 aid.

There were 1632 cases receiving this help in October. There were 125 other families on general assistance with an average of $40 a month entirely from State funds.

$2 Million Raised for Heart Study

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—Scientists will spend two million dollars, and maybe three million dollars, this year trying to crack more puzzles about heart disease.

All this money will go for research. It's a new record, and one of the bright spots in the story of the Nation's greatest killer disease. But even the most hopeful researchers don't expect in 1949 to answer the jackpot questions—how to prevent and cure the main kinds of heart trouble.

The two millions or more for research will bring them closer, and faster, and that's the important thing. On the way, they will find more ways of helping victims of heart diseases.

The amount going into research this year is staggering by contrast with a few years ago. In 1940, researchers had only $93,835 to finance their questions of how and why. In 1948, they had $1,600,000 and were getting into high gear.

Goal Is Tripled

THE MONEY comes from private agencies, public contributions and the Government. About $600,000 a year comes from the Life Insurance Medical Research Fund, set up in 1945 as the first private agency for research in the heart field.

The American Heart Association this year hopes to raise $750,000 for research, compared with $250,000 last year. The United States Public Health Service, under the new National Heart Act, spent $750,000 on research last year. Its spendings this year will push the total from all three sources over two million dollars, and possibly up to three millions.

Research this year again will center on the three most serious heart diseases—rheumatic fever, hardening of the arteries and high blood pressure. Other studies will explore deeper into the mechanics of how the heart and artery cells work, how blood flows through the body and through body organs. Facts learned in this kind of work may lay the foundation for new treatment of heart and blood vessel diseases.

Rice Diet Tried

LAST year brought progress in many lines. Some, as summarized by a report of the Life Insurance Medical Research Fund, and by Dr. Charles A. R. Connor, medical director of the Heart Association, are:

Greater use of radioactive isotopes to trace what happens to food elements, to drugs and other materials in the body.

A bit more evidence that a fatty substance, cholesterol, plays an important role in development of hardening of the arteries. Cholesterol is found in foods like eggs and milk, but the human body also manufactures it. It is not yet certain whether cholesterol in foods is a cause of hardening of the arteries.

Studies of special diets to combat high blood pressure. One is a rice diet almost completely lacking in salt.

Britain Will Pay Freight on Gifts Of Some Kinds

LONDON (AP).—The flow of gift parcels from the United States to Britain will be increased by an Anglo-American agreement signed in London. The pact exempts the gifts from customs duty and provides for repayment of freight charges to senders. Parcels affected:

Relief goods sent by American voluntary nonprofit agencies to charitable organizations in the U. K.; standard packages sent by nonprofit relief agencies to individuals in Britain on the order of individual Americans; and relief packages sent by parcel post or commercial channels to individuals in Britain.

Under the Economic Cooperation Act, ocean freight charges for relief packages already are being paid by ECA. Under the new agreement, transportation charges within the U. K. will be defrayed out of the sterling counterpart fund set aside by Britain to match ERP dollar grants.

The British customs duties on such parcels have been waived by Britain for some time. The agreement on this point merely formalizes procedure already in effect.

Unwarranted

No remonstrance from the United States attorney should have been necessary to convince police that they must observe the recent Supreme Court decision with respect to search warrants. That decision was pointed specifically at the District of Columbia. It reversed two convictions in a gambling case because the arrests had been made without benefit of search warrants. The implication is clear that if any future cases involving evidence obtained illegally reach the higher courts they will be thrown out.

The delay in bringing United States Attorney Fay's letter of December 22 to the attention of all members of the Police Department is hard to understand. For what Mr. Fay was talking about has an essential bearing on law enforcement in the District. Mr. Fay's office can scarcely be expected to prosecute cases which are based on evidence violative of the Supreme Court ruling. In other words, the continuance of illegal police practices can be a serious impediment to the punishment of crime.

Most police, we feel sure, understand and observe the law with respect to warrants. But the good work of police officers in obtaining evidence, especially in gambling cases, can be totally nullified if arrests are made indiscriminately. If there is to be an effective liaison between police and the prosecutor, then it seems to us that there ought to be more positive steps to follow up Mr. Fay's letter. It would not be amiss for the police to be given periodic instruction in the niceties of the law, including the fundamental rights of citizens.

Basketball Bribe

Four men, described as professional gamblers, have been arrested and placed under heavy bail in New York for having attempted to corrupt a member of the George Washington University basketball team. The story is that one of the men scraped an acquaintance with Mr. Dave Shapiro, one of the captains of the team, and presently offered him substantial bribes if he would see to it that George Washington lost certain important games. Much perturbed, Shapiro took counsel with a friend, another student named Art Cerra. They decided to seek the advice of Cerra's father, a police official in Brooklyn. Thus a trap was carefully prepared, into which the gamblers walked blindly on the eve of the recent game with Manhattan College in New York. Following police instructions, Shapiro had agreed to accept a bribe of $1000, stipulating that the money should be paid to an intermediary, described as his uncle, but who was actually a New York detective.

Thus Mr. Shapiro demonstrated not only his personal integrity but a very high degree of courage. Gamblers and gangsters very frequently work in alliance, and it must have occurred more than once to the young man that if his double role were discovered, his life might be in considerable danger. The somewhat astonishing naivete and ineptitude shown by the gamblers suggests, however, that they are scarcely figures of much importance in the underworld; they have in fact been described as belonging to the "tin horn" category, although an assistant district attorney now in charge of the case asserts that they were acting as agents for some rich and powerful syndicate.

The special interest of these betting syndicates in collegiate basketball has been evident for many years. A particularly ugly example came to light about four years ago when five players of the varsity basketball squad of Brooklyn College, N. Y., confessed that they had been taking bribes from professional gamblers. One of the gamblers convicted in that case was the notorious Harvey Stemmer, who was afterward involved in similar charges relating to the attempted corruption of two professional football players.

All these cases have aroused a good deal of indignation. For while Americans by and large affect a certain cynical tolerance toward corruption in business and politics, they are curiously insistent that athletics (with the exception of professional wrestling, which has passed from the category of sport into that of theater) be conducted on an ethical plane similar to that of the Kantian categorical imperative. Yet it occurs to us to wonder whether the basic disorder is really with the gamblers and the players whose cupidity sometimes proves greater than their honor, or whether it does not lie rather with the exaggerated importance placed on athletic contests by the American colleges and newspapers. After all, if so much excitement about these contests were not whipped up by an elaborately organized ballyhoo, considerably less money would be bet on them; and that means that there would be less "sucker money" to excite the attention of professional gamblers.

Farewell To Culture

Today the book publishers seem to have locked the doors with instructions that they be opened to none save authors whose books are known to have been prepared according to sure-fire formulas, such as how to be happy in the machine age, or how to give oneself home treatments in insulin shock-therapy, or novels about how the new girl owner of Circle K Ranch frustrated the cattle rustlers and the sheriff who was in league with them, or about how the Private Eye, after having been disembowled, decapitated, defenestrated, excoriated, and otherwise tortured for 207 pages, finally comes up with the gangsters and the crooked police commissioner on page 208, or about how the girl, having made a fool of the poor guy for 22 consecutive chapters, decides in Chapter XXIII to make a life business of it and so marries him.

To put it in crude business terms, the publishers find themselves confronted on the one side by steadily increasing production costs and on the other side by the stubborn unwillingness of more than a negligible portion of the book-buying public to pay more than $4 for any book, with the possible but doubtful exceptions of the Gutenberg Bible, the Kelmscott Chaucer and the Book of Kells. The publishers also find themselves harassed by the merchandizing methods of the great book clubs which are often able to distribute books to their subscribers at less than the publishers' wholesale price. Again, the publishers also find themselves unable to maintain much variety in their lists because of the refusal of many booksellers, especially in the smaller cities and towns, to carry a large assortment in stock.

And now publishers and book clubs alike are faced by a new and formidable competitor for the attention of the home-loving American public in the hours between dinner and bedtime. This competitor, of course, is television. Throughout the great length and breadth of America, it seems, men, women and children are quietly putting the Critique of Pure Reason, the Institutes of the Christian Religion, the Principia Mathematica, and the History of European Morals back on the living-room shelves, and are canceling their subscriptions to book clubs, in order to give their undivided attention to two dimensional representations of bowling matches, song-and-dance numbers, lightweight boxing bouts, and interviews on the Indonesian question.

In a statement in New York the other day Mr. J. Raymond Tiffany, general counsel of the Book Manufacturers Institute, asserted that television has become a grave menace to American culture, so grave indeed that a good deal of "constructive thinking" will be required to combat it. Mr. Tiffany seems to think that this fondness for staring at a mechanical gadget for three or four hours instead of curling up by the fire with a pipe, a dog and a good book betokens a certain esthetic underdevelopment, a certain Philistinism, if you like, on the part of the American people. They seem, as he says, unable or unwilling to recognize that—> you cannot fondle a TV set as you can a good book. You cannot write marginal notes on a TV screen as you can in a book. TV will not enable one to memorize a whole passage as the story unfolds from beautifully constructed sentences. TV can digest a story, but in the doing thereof the depth of feeling, the charm of living through the entire plot, is lost.

How very true! And, yet, we suspect that Mr. Tiffany may despair prematurely. After all, we are old enough to remember when the radio seemed almost as dangerous a threat to literature as television seems now. But gradually a generation grew up which had been accustomed since infancy to the feat of simultaneously reading one set of printed words while listening to a totally different set of spoken words. It is true that television seems to demand complete visual and aural attention. Yet we dare say it will not be many years before a new generation of Americans will have been bred who will be sufficiently strabismic and schizophrenic to be capable of reading, let us say, the Timaeus of Plato with one eye and of watching a horse race with the other.

Japanese Strikes

Philippine Ambassador Romulo had the Russians' number when he accused them of seeking to use the Far Eastern Commission as a "springboard for propaganda." There can be no other interpretation of the persistent Soviet attempt to censure General MacArthur for suggesting to the Japanese last summer that strikes against the government be prohibited. That the other members of the commission saw through the Russian manuever is shown by the 9-1 vote against the Russian motion.

By this vote the commission members did not indicate approval of the law enacted by the Japanese Diet on November 30. That law forbids strikes against the government as well as collective bargaining by government workers—though workers can engage in what is tantamount to collective bargaining with the National Personnel Authority, except that they cannot use the strike weapon. These restrictions apply to the broad class of public servants; in certain government-owned corporations workers retain full bargaining and strike rights. Such procedure is similar to that followed in the United States. Some British Commonwealth nations have felt that public employes in Japan ought to be allowed the wide latitude found in their own systems. Our own belief is that, considering the stage of development of Japanese trade unions and their susceptibility to subversive influence in foreign-directed efforts to upset the government, the law adopted by the Diet is reasonable.

However, the merit of this law, which is still to be discussed in the Far Eastern Commission, was not the issue in Thursday's vote. The question was simply whether General MacArthur was within his authority in making the no-strike suggestion to the Japanese government. Clearly the commission felt that he was. For, although the Soviet Ambassador produced voluminous references to the Potsdam Agreement and Far Eastern Commission policy decisions, none of them covers the point specifically or by implication. The Russian argument was both transparent and irrelevant. If anyone sought to assert in Russia the same rights of strike which the Soviets are insisting on for Japan, the chances are that he would land in Siberia if not in some less terrestrial place.

Curb On Filibusters

Now that the House of Representatives has curbed the powers of its Rules Committee to veto legislation before it reaches the floor, the Senate can scarcely do less in liberating itself from the filibuster. Many Senators are alert to this necessity. On a single day last week five resolutions proposing amendments to the existing ineffectual cloture rule were introduced. Certainly the public is eager to see this reform put into effect. The time is ripe for its sponsors to press their case with all the vigor they can command.

All the resolutions offered last week would effect some improvement over the present helplessness of the Senate in the face of a talkfest. But the majority of them would merely extend the operation of cloture upon a two-thirds vote. Obviously, this would leave the major defect in the present system untouched. Under the existing requirement for a two-thirds vote, cloture has been adopted only 4 times out of 19 tries since 1917. In other words, cloture applied by a two-thirds vote is little better than no restraint at all on filibusters.

In principle, moreover, the two-thirds provision is wrong. It means that the action of the Senate, when a filibuster gets under way, may be controlled by the minority instead of the majority. That is the negation of democratic practice. If we believe in representative government, surely a simple majority can be trusted to make the decision as to when debate should be ended no less than to make other decisions. In these days when rapid action must often be taken to cope with an emergency and when Congress is always faced by more needed legislation than it can possibly enact, the only argument that can be made for the two-thirds cloture rule is that obstruction of the democratic process is sometimes justified. And that argument seems to us indefensible.

Fortunately, two of the proposed amendments—those submitted by Senator Myers and Senator Morse—would permit the closing of debate by majority vote. Senator Myers would limit each Senator to one hour of debate after a cloture motion had been voted. Senator Morse would allow two hours. Neither limitation would work any real hardship, for the Senate has usually debated a bill thoroughly before any thought of invoking cloture arises. To assume that the Senate would throttle itself by this device seems absurd to anyone who knows the tradition of unlimited debate in that body. Rather, the proposed rules would save the Senate from making a ridiculous spectacle of itself when the country is demanding action in place of talk.

Korea Recognized

President Truman's decision to extend full diplomatic recognition to the new Korean Republic came as no surprise, especially since it had been rumored for some days in advance of the fact. Recognition is the logical sequel to the action of the United Nations Assembly in sanctioning the Rhee administration, established in South Korea after elections sponsored by the U. N., as the legitimate government of all Korea. This alone cannot bring about stable conditions in the turmoil with which Korea has been afflicted since its "liberation." But as a countermove in the cold war, recognition by the United States can help overcome the much-trumpeted withdrawal of Russian troops from the northern zone. Moreover, the according of full diplomatic status to Korea can serve the healthy purpose of making more difficult any Soviet-directed effort to undermine the new republic.

THE BEAUTIFUL WEATHER

Under a greenwood awning striped with daybreak,
I, an awed ring-bearer,
Come now to seal with circlet eye the wedding
Of vernal earth and sun, the sought wayfarer.

Earth lifts her bough-brown hair from snowy pillows,
(Frost-feathered stars were slow in gliding over!)
And veils herself in wild crabapple blossoms,
And moves to meet the lover.

In colored coats with notes and staves of music
Worked deftly in their woof, the ladybirds
And pibald beetles hold her train of grasses.
Jack-in-the-pulpit preaches low wind-words.

Only "I do" I hear now—warm yes only,
Uttered from heart-shaped, heart-hued robin-breasts.
Only "I do" from earth's ecstatic voices
On twigs, in joyful nests.

Happy in dawning woods! This is the longed-for:
Tall supple sunshine wed
To dewy soil beneath a dancing heaven;
The rumpled mind becomes a pine-sweet bed;

Forever to contain—grass-gold—sun-green—
These two as at the trembling hour of wonder,
Within a leafy grove of quiet thought,
That even hawks of care can never sunder.

Orleans For Oran

I have read with interest the letter sent from G. B. S., of Fort Meade, Md., appearing in your issue of January 3, about an item contained in our Information Bulletin concerning the adoption of Oran by the City of Wichita, Kans.

I am grateful to your reader for his observations which have led to the discovery that a mistake had been made in a telegraphic report from Paris. Wichita has adopted Orleans, in France, a badly damaged city, as you know, and not Oran as reported.

This little incident seems to prove that rapid communications essential in our times may sometimes add to our confusion and even lead to diplomatic embarrassment.

Ilse Koch's Trial

The Ilse Koch matter has been difficult to judge unemotionally with respect to whether the law permits a new trial.

I always had the idea that the rule of double jeopardy referred to a situation where a person was tried and acquitted, and hence was not deemed to be subject to trial for the same offense. But how this applied to the Ilse Koch matter seemed doubtful, since she was found guilty and was not acquitted. She had seemingly obtained a reversal on appeal after having been found guilty of a high degree of crime.

Referring to a law book I seem to find the following: That where a person is found guilty by a lower court, and the defendant obtains a reversal upon appeal, a new trial on the same offense does not constitute double jeopardy.

Since I am not a criminal law expert this is not offered as authoritative, but it does seem that there may be too much haste to consider the rule against double jeopardy as a dogma rather than a body of law. It is entirely possible that the prosecutor should bring a new trial, and when Ilse Koch's attorney offers "double jeopardy" as a defense both sides would submit briefs for a judicial determination.

At very least, it seems that a committee of lawyers might look into the question of a new trial. A few men like Thurman Arnold would be fine.

Dutch "Police Action"

Regarding the letter of William Armstrong on the Indonesia situation, published on December 20; it is first necessary to point out that the self-styled Republic of Indonesia was established under Japanese protection on August 17, 1945, as the last act of an already defeated army to harass the Allied powers. The men who created the republic had either collaborated with Japanese during the war or had been secret members of the Communist Party.

There seems to be an impression that the republic constitutes the entire Netherlands East Indies. Actually it comprises only about 25 per cent of the area, the remaining 75 per cent being in harmony with Dutch plans to establish a federation of Indonesian states that will join in a union with Holland. Already seven autonomous territories have been set up and have become part of the federation proclaimed on December 18, 1948, in accordance with existing agreements.

This federation, to which the majority of Indonesians subscribe, is undoubtedly the most satisfactory solution. The Communist wing of the republic, however, could not permit the establishment of a stable state, because that would set up a formidable barrier to the chaos-and-conquest blueprint of the Kremlin. Unfortunately this part of the Soviet design became all too much a part of the general philosophy of the entire republican leadership, and it is due to this that attempts at settlement on the part of the Dutch were frustrated.

The Renville Agreement, concluded under U. N. auspices, laid down a fair and just procedure for settlement of Dutch-Indonesian difficulties. Yet the republican leaders have consistently stalled talks designed to put the pact into practice. Perhaps the soundest reason for this "police action" advanced by the Dutch authorities is the fact that the republican government was deteriorating and was progressively less able to exercise sovereign rights in its area, thus making it impossible to reach any enforcible agreement.

Dutch good faith has been amply demonstrated during a half-century period of granting the Indonesian people growing political responsibility.

The Netherlands action is within its own legally-recognized territory, following a long period of provocation. Even the U. N.-sponsored Renville Agreement recognizes Dutch sovereignty over the republic.

Jefferson On Religion

In view of your recent editorial on the decision of the Supreme Court in the McCollum case and in view of the reference made to a letter written by Jefferson in 1822, in the statement of the Roman Catholic Bishops of the United States on "The Christian in Action," your readers will be interested, I am sure, in a portion of Mr. Jefferson's letter:

"In our university you know there is no professorship of divinity. A handle has been made of this, to disseminate an idea that this is an institution, not merely of no religion, but against all religion. Occasion was taken at the last meeting of the visitors to bring forward an idea that might silence this calumny, which weighed on the minds of some honest friends to the institution.

"In our annual report to the Legislature, after stating the constitutional reasons against a public establishment of any religious instruction, we suggest the expediency of encouraging the different religious sects to establish, each for itself, a professorship of their own tenets, on the confines of the university, so near as that their students may attend the lectures there, and have the free use of our library, and every other accommodation we can give them; preserving, however, their independence of us and of each other. This fills the chasm objected to ours, as a defect in an institution professing to give instruction in all useful sciences.

"I think the invitation will be accepted, by some sects from candid intentions, and by others from jealousy and rivalship. And by bringing the sects together, and mixing them with the mass of other students, we shall soften their asperities, liberalize and neutralize their prejudices, and make the general religion a religion of peace, reason, and morality."

Mr. Jefferson seem to be more concerned that the churches be enlightened by education than that education be enlightened by the churches.

Single Chief Of Staff

Your December 30 editorial, "Report on Unification," refers to the proposal for a single chief of staff as "the only workable solution".

Such a categorical statement implies (1) that the present Joint Chiefs of Staff is not an effective agency for the over-all direction of the armed forces, and (2) that a single chief of staff would be the best and only device for achieving such overall control.

On the basis of wartime performance it is impossible to find evidence to substantiate such a pointed indictment of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Actually, according to competent testimony before congressional committees, there were not over "five or six" questions upon which the Joint Chiefs of Staff could not reach unanimous agreement. Any top-flight directing agency, military or civilian, that could produce such a record of unanimity on major policy decisions cannot, with accuracy, be labled unworkable.

Nor does it seem logical that The Washington Post has based its criticism on the postwar performance of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. To do so would necessarily imply that the present peacetime members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are less capable of resolving questions of national security than were their wartime predecessors. This, obviously, would constitute an unwarranted and indefensible slur on the chiefs of the three services.

It is submitted that before advocating the essentially Prussianistic single chief of staff concept, The Post should establish as a logical foundation for its position precisely the manner in which the Joint Chiefs of Staff system is incapable of doing in peace what it so admirably accomplished in war.

The editorial's statement as to the exclusive "workability" of the single chief of staff idea is contradicted by the actual experience of those nations that mistakenly adopted this deceptively attractive, but inherently weak, system of armed forces control. It is historically demonstrable that, in every country where accepted, the single chief of staff concept has been responsible for major strategic errors.

When the actual record of the single chief of staff system is examined and its inadequacies exposed, and when that record is compared with the accomplishments of our Joint Chiefs of Staff we can better appreciate the full import of Mr. Forrestal's pertinent statement:

"I think to emasculate and destroy that instrument—the Joint Chiefs of Staff—which has worked in this war, is something we ought to think about very, very carefully before we substitute, as I say, this single mind of a single genius to take its place."

Fair Deal In Foreign Policy

By Andre Visson

President's Message

THE FAIR DEAL, which was the guiding idea of President Truman's message to Congress on the state of the Union, naturally refers primarily to domestic policy. But diplomatic observers in the Nation's Capital who read with particular attention the passages in the President's message referring to foreign policy have a strong feeling that the Fair Deal idea is bound also to have a considerable impact on American foreign policy.

The most significant, but at the same time the most enigmatic, of all passages referring to foreign policy, is President Truman's statement: "It should be clear by now to all nations that we are not seeking to freeze the status quo. We have no intention of preserving the injustices of the past. We welcome the constructive efforts being made by many nations to achieve a better life for their citizens."

This passage is obviously open to many different interpretations. What are "the injustices of the past" President Truman was thinking of? Are they the injustices of what still remains of the colonial system in Asia and Africa? Are they the injustices resulting from the unfair distribution of raw materials and access to warm waters? Or are they the injustices resulting from Soviet expansion in eastern Europe?

What is the "status quo" which we are not seeking to freeze? Was the President thinking of China, where we have refused to help Chiang Kai-shek to defend the status quo? Or was the President thinking of western Europe, whose political and economic status quo we would like to see replaced by an integrated association of western European nations? Or was the President thinking of the status quo in eastern Europe created by the Yalta and Potsdam agreements?

And what are the "constructive efforts" made "by many nations to achieve a better life for their citizens" that we welcome? Are they the plans for the industrialization of the still undeveloped countries of the world? Or do they refer to the nationalization programs of Britain, and to a certain extent of France?

OBVIOUSLY, every foreign diplomat can interpret this passage in President Truman's message according to his own wishes and aspirations. But whichever interpretation may be the most correct, one thing is certain. President Truman was eager to destroy the false idea created partly by Soviet propaganda, but also accepted in many anti-Soviet circles, that the United States is a "citadel of conservatism" and that American foreign policy is primarily concerned with defending the status quo and opposing change.

It is very significant that President Truman did not refer to what has become known as the "Truman Doctrine." Apparently, the "policy of containment" has now been by-passed. President Truman and his advisers may not yet know exactly what the next steps in American foreign policy should be—aside from the coming North Atlantic agreement and the European Recovery Program—but they are determined on a more dynamic and a more progressive foreign policy. The United States can no longer be satisfied with containing Communist expansion. It wants to help the nations of the world to achieve peace and prosperity and, if possible, a fair deal for all.

THE EMPHASIS on peace is considered by diplomatic observers in Washington as a very significant feature of President Truman's message. He began by stating that "this great Republic is foremost among the nations of the world in the search for peace," and at the end he emphasized once again how essential it was for him to have the complete cooperation of the Congress "to carry out the great work that must be done to keep the peace in this world . . ."

The "search for peace," in the opinion of several foreign diplomats here, may become the keynote of American foreign policy in the months to come. This "search for peace" should by no means be confused with "appeasement." The road to appeasement has been definitely barred. But while a year ago the United States, because of its lamentable unpreparedness and the frightening weakness of western Europe, had to overemphasize its determination to stop further Soviet expansion, even at the risk of an immediate military showdown, American policy-makers may find it possible to tone down the martial tune somewhat in 1949.

To be sure, as President Truman pointed out, we are still standing on the threshold of an era which can mean either great achievement or terrible catastrophe. But our increasing military strength, our increasing military and economic aid to all nations willing to defend themselves, and the increasing—even if too slow for our liking—military and economic integration of western Europe, allow us to view the prospect of peace with more hope than a year ago.

We are still far from our goal. The road we have to travel is still strewn with booby-traps—as we discovered when we tried to work out an agreement on the Ruhr—but we have a feeling that despite all the dangers ahead, the danger of immediate war is less today than it was a year ago.

Capehart's FTC Bomb Was a Dud

By Drew Pearson

JUST before the Eightieth Congress gave up the ghost, Senator Homer Capehart, Indiana Republican and former music-box manufacturer, made a last futile effort to deliver big business from the Democrats. He planted a legislative time bomb under the Federal Trade Commission and hopefully stuck his fingers in his ears. But the explosion never went off.

What Capehart was trying to do was knock the backbone out of the Trade Commission—established by Woodrow Wilson, after a long battle, to keep industrial giants off the little fellow's toes.

Actual brains behind the plot and the ace up Wall Street's sleeve was not Capehart, but his chief counsel, William Simon. Together they conducted hearings on the basing-point system, and secretly drafted an interim report intended to torpedo the FTC. Even with sugar coating, however, this was too raw for other Senators on the subcommittee to swallow.

When news of the suppressed report leaked out, both denied it existed and tried to cover up the evidence. But the Merry-Go-Round has now secured a confidential copy.

The report is supposed to be a summary of Capehart's basing-point hearings, called to scrutinize the Supreme Court's decision outlawing the basing-point system. This was the price-fixing system used by the big industries by which cement, steel and other commodities purchased, for instance, in Pittsburgh, cost just the same if purchased in Geneva, Utah, 2000 miles away. The Trade Commission ruled this out as monopolistic and the Supreme Court upheld the commission.

The Capehart-Simon report cleverly pretended to praise the Trade Commissioners who defeated the basing-point system. Then, in the middle of these hearts and flowers, it softly suggested that these same commissioners be ousted.

Significant: The only commissioner whom the Capehart-Simon report didn't want ousted was Lowell Mason, who is "in disagreement with the other four and his views may not be considered as indicating commission policy."

Also significant: It was this same Lowell Mason, frequently considered big business' representative on the FTC, who has boasted privately he got William Simon his job with the Capehart committee.

Even more significant, in fact amazing: Simon belongs to the Chicago law firm now defending General Foods Corp. from a suit over the same basing-point system Simon was investigating. Furthermore, Simon not only was one of the lawyers on the case, but actually appeared privately before the FTC—after he had gone to work for the Capehart committee. In other words, this versatile lawyer was investigating the Trade Commission for the Senate at the very same time he was handling a case before the Trade Commission.

A Trade Commission memo states that on August 20 at precisely 3:50 p. m., Simon called on FTC lawyers about vacating General Foods' notice of default. He also held subsequent conversations within the FTC in behalf of his client.

Note: Ironic fact is that General Foods, now bucking the Federal Trade Commission, is owned in part by Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, whose husband (former Ambassador to Russia) was appointed FTC chairman by Woodrow Wilson. Davies has nothing to do with the policies of General Foods, remains a strong opponent of trade practices such as practiced by his wife's company.

The Republican Schism

THE scars of the secret GOP Senate caucus will remain with the Republican Party for a long time. The fight was not really over Bob Taft of Ohio and Henry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts, but over the basic issue within the GOP—the issue Dewey straddled in the recent election—whether the party shall go to right or left.

At times tempers flared. Senator Lodge, who challenged Taft's leadership, was attacked for his closeness to Tom Dewey. The man who led the attack was, ironically, Maine's free-airplane-riding Owen Brewster, a once-ardent Dewey man.

"Some people are saying that we need new faces in our leadership because of what happened in the last campaign," said Brewster. "That may be true, but Senator Taft can't be blamed for the defeat of our party. The quarterback was in Albany, not in Washington.

"Republicans lost in November because the campaign was poorly managed."

New York's Irving Ives and Oregon's Wayne Morse jumped to their feet, demanding to know why Brewster had waited so long to criticize the conduct of the campaign.

"One reason we are making this fight here is to prevent a repetition of what happened in November," declared Ives. "Our conservative leadership was discredited in the last election."

There was another flareup when Clyde Reed of Kansas inadvertently, but accurately, referred to Colorado's Eugene Millikin, chairman of the caucus, as "Taft's lieutenant."

"I'm not anybody's lieutenant," snapped Millikin. "I'm my own boss and do my own thinking. I like Bob Taft personally, but I don't take orders from him or anyone else."

North Dakota's Bill Langer relieved the tension by chiding his colleagues for "loose labeling" in the clash between the conservative and liberal wings.

"Actually there are three types of Republicans in this body," said Langer, with a grin. "We have conservatives, self-styled liberals and a real liberal—myself."

Lodge and his progressive compatriots knew they were licked when the caucus approved a ruling by Millikin that voting on matters involving "personalities" would be secret, while voting on changes in rules would be public.

This meant that Taft's move to change the rules so he could continue as Republican policy chief for another four years, would carry. Some Senators who might oppose the Taft proposal in a secret ballot wouldn't dare oppose him openly. The Ohioan packs too much influence and he has a long memory.

However, Morse, Vermont's George Aiken and Connecticut's Ray Baldwin, fought to the last for a secret vote on everything.

"This scheme to change our rules does involve a personality—Senator Taft," insisted Morse. "Let's not camouflage it. We are being asked to vote on continuing the gentleman in office for another four years, or displacing him. I have a high personal esteem for Bob Taft, but he represents a type of leadership most Republicans throughout the country, I am convinced, do not want."

That ended the debate. But it hasn't ended the bitterness between the two wings of the GOP.

THE USUAL BACKSTAGE ARGUMENT

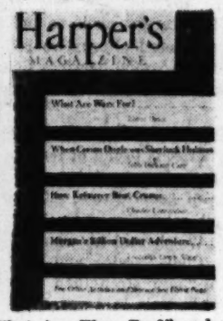
The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

IN STAFFORDSHIRE, England, in the year 1903, a series of animals was found badly mutilated by an adroit and invisible maniac. At the same time the police received jeering letters about the crimes. One letter threatened that the young girls of the community might suffer a like fate.



Police arrested the vicar's son, a dark, unusual looking, brilliant youth, and sent him to jail for the crimes. Harper's magazine has a piece by John Dickson Carr telling how Sir Arthur Conan Doyle did a Sherlock Holmes to prove the youth's innocence. He devoted eight months' intensive work and all his resources to "The Case of George Edalji." It makes at least as good reading as Holmes' fictional exploits.

Also highly recommended in this month's outstanding issue of Harper's, is the second installment of Frederick Lewis Allen's series on the Morgan Empire; Charles Edmundson's "How Kefauver Beat Crump;" Elmer Davis' "What Are Wars For?" and C. Lester Walker's "A Million Unknown Diabetics."

WHILE strongly dissociating themselves from his views, Life editors run an extraordinary assertion by Jay Franklin on President Truman's foreign policy. As they point out, what position, if any, Franklin occupies in relation to the President is far from clear. He refers, however, to "my private conversations" with the President.

He goes on to assert in bluntest fashion that Lovett and Forrestal are tools of the munitions makers and the oil interests; that President Truman interprets the election as a repudiation of the State Department policy (sic), and that Truman will institute a softer Russian policy.

To quote Franklin, the President plans to take "a little of the poison ivy from around the olive branch which he is determined to wave at his fellow prisoner in the . . . Kremlin."

OF SPECIAL local interest is the Saturday Evening Post's story by Hugh Morrow on the Cleveland Park Boys Club. Started in 1934 by Larry Conant, the club was a challenge to the theory that American boys must grow up without knowing their fathers.

No boy is allowed in the athletic club unless his father not only joins, but attends games in which his son is interested. He must make himself an expert in, say, being a good halfback.

So successful has the club been, that Conant has left the Cleveland Park Club in charge of another member and has formed a nonprofit corporation, "Dad Coached Clubs," to organize similar clubs in other communities.

AN UNDERSTANDABLY irate correspondent has prodded us for not mentioning St. Clair McKelway's absorbing story of an embezzler in the New Yorker. The second and last part of "The Wily Wilby" appears in this week's—and it's worth going through the trash, if necessary, to retrieve last week's.

SOMEONE else writes: "In the current American Mercury are two unusual articles, one on Mary Margaret McBride and the other titled, 'Small Town Parson' . . . The current Reader's Digest is the dullest I have seen in 20 years. I wish you would read 'The Black Death.' Here is an excellent subject, but the author tells nothing about what the reader wants to know; namely, how did science finally come upon ways and means of conquering the Plague? When was it? Who did it? Has it reappeared since?"

WHEN famous people meet each other, more often than not things happen. Leonard Lyons says so in Collier's, and he should know. It's an everyday, or more accurately every night, occurrence with him to introduce them to each other. Sometimes they produce plays together and sometimes, like more ordinary mortals, they just get married. But it's usually entertaining, and so is Lyons' "Want to Meet a Celebrity?"

Another Collier's feature is an attractive page devoted to Mary Worth, the top comic produced by Ken Ernst and Allen Saunders. These two gentleman have had a meteoric career in the comic-strip field in the postwar period and now rate attention in the series that Collier's is producing on outstanding comic-strip creators.

NOT only is our Government too big, but it overlaps in all directions, says William B. Arthur of Look's Washington Bureau. He gives some frightening examples unearthed by the Hoover Commission.

Hallett Abend notes that General MacArthur himself stated in 1945 that any military occupation of conquered territory that lasts longer than three years defeats its own ends and is bound to be a failure. MacArthur was right in his statement and all wrong in his administration, charges Abend, and gives reasons why.

Matter of Fact

Lawyer Analyzes the Hiss Case

By Stewart Alsop

THE WEIGHT of the evidence which has been brought forward against Alger Hiss has seemed so overwhelming that many people have been tempted to prejudge his case, to assume his guilt before his guilt is proved. Therefore it is worth describing an analysis of the available evidence by a highly capable lawyer, who has become convinced that it is at least possible that Hiss may be innocent.

The lawyer's analysis is too long for brief summary. But the most interesting parts of it concern hypothetical explanations of the two episodes most damaging to Hiss—the episode of the Ford car, and the most recent episode of the stolen documents.

It will be recalled that Hiss testified that the car, worth about $25, was "thrown in" when he sublet his apartment to Chambers, whom he claimed to have known only as "George Crossley." Chambers denied this, charging that Hiss actually turned the car over to the use of the Communist Party, through a Communist-owned service station in Washington.

The title certificate of the car was finally located, and seemed wholly to corroborate Chambers. It was signed by Hiss, notarized by a notary who worked with Hiss in the Justice Department at the time, and was dated well after the time when Hiss claimed to have included the car in the apartment deal. Moreover, the man to whom the car had been transferred appeared before the Un-American Activities Committee and refused to answer whether or not he was a Communist. At this point, many people concluded that Hiss had been lying.

Formalizing the Gift

BUT THE LAWYER does not consider this evidence conclusive. Chambers, he asserts, could have received the car when Hiss said he did. He could have used it for some time. He could then have passed it along to the Communist Party through the Communist-owned service station, which Chambers testified he knew about, although he had, oddly, forgotten where it was. Through the service station, Chambers could have secured a form of transfer of title, inserted the name of a reputable automobile agency and mailed the form to Hiss for execution.

According to this theory, Hiss, remembering that he had given the car away, might have signed the form, had it notarized by an acquaintance working in the same department, and then forgotten all about it, as busy men will. Such a lapse of memory would be no more extraordinary, the lawyer claims, than several which Chambers has suffered. He cites Chambers' inability to recall the name of the Federal agency in which he worked, or the salary he was paid, or, strangest of all, the correct date of his taking the momentous step of leaving the Communist Party.

As for the more recent episode of the secret documents, the lawyer points out that these documents fall into three categories, (a) notes allegedly written by Alger Hiss, (b) documents alleged to have been typed on a typewriter owned by Hiss and (c) photostats of actual State Department documents. The papers supposed to have come from Hiss fall into the first two categories. This suggests to the lawyer that if Hiss were indeed a spy, he was a remarkably stupid spy for so intelligent a man. For, unlike the agents who provided only photostats, he must have made available papers which obviously could be traced back to him.

Access to Typewriter

THE LAWYER develops a strictly hypothetical explanation for this aspect of the case also. Chambers could briefly have secured the Hiss typewriter during the time he knew Hiss, and used it to copy secret documents. He could also have used the espionage network of which he was a part to obtain notes written by Hiss for legitimate use in the State Department. And Chambers could have saved these papers for use when he saw fit.

Clearly it is impossible to imagine that Hiss is innocent without also accepting the possibility that Chambers had long planned something like what has now happened. There is no real evidence of any sort to support such a supposition. Yet, according to the lawyer's analysis, if the Hiss case is not to be prejudged, it must be assumed as possible.

He points out that Chambers has repeatedly displayed a marked emotional reaction to Hiss, on one occasion weeping publicly while explaining his reasons for accusing the younger man. Another curious point—which may, of course, have no meaning at all—concerns a novel by Franz Werfel called "Class Reunion," which Chambers translated in his Communist days. It is a psychological study of the emotional relationship between two young men, a relationship which led one of them to bring about the utter destruction of the other. In the words of the novel, as translated by Chambers: "A work of annihilation had begun . . . It was to end 25 years later in the detention cell of a prison."

There is nothing in all this to indicate that Chambers has not been telling the truth. The lawyer's hypothesis are merely an attempt to explain how Hiss might conceivably be innocent. Certainly the available evidence weighs very heavily against Hiss. Especially baffling is Hiss' initial failure to identify a man whom, even according to the lawyers' hypothesis, Hiss must have known well. Even so, although Hiss has been indicted for perjury he has not been found guilty. And in this country a man is presumed innocent until found otherwise.

5,706,000 Veterans Collecting

State Bonuses Near Two Billion

THE MOUNTAIN of money piling up for veterans' bonuses is near the two-billion-dollar mark—and it may go higher in 1949.

A survey by the Associated Press at the start of a new legislative season shows:

Nine States now are paying out $1,540,256,000 to 4,750,000 World War II vets or their survivors.

Voters in six other States have approved plans to give about 452 million dollars to approximately 956,000 former GIs, but the cash has not yet been distributed.

Bonus programs involving around 640 million dollars have cleared the first hurdles in two more States.

Proposals to make cash awards to men and women who served in the armed forces are expected to be presented to lawmakers in at least seven additional States in the weeks ahead.

THUS, as the new year begins, 15 States are paying or preparing to pay $1,992,256,000 to 5,706,000 living veterans or the next of kin of their dead buddies.

If there is fast and favorable action in the two States where the bonus already has passed the first tests—Indiana and Pennsylvania—the total could be raised to about $2,632,256,000 in 1949.

These two—and other States—may get into the bonus column. Or they may not. Bonus propositions got approval of voters in six States in last November's election but were defeated in Nebraska, Oregon, Wisconsin and Missouri.

The nine States already paying bonuses are Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Illinois, Michigan, New York, Connecticut and Ohio. A recent tally showed they had distributed 4,112,543 checks for a total of $1,207,000,000.

Bonus plans have been approved in referenda in Iowa, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Louisiana and Washington. But, before payments can be made, legislatures must iron out financial and other details, or officials must set up machinery to handle claims.

Indianans voted in favor of a bonus last fall but the result was not binding on the men who hold the State's purse strings. Thus, the lawmakers must decide if they want to make grants and, if so, where they will get the funds. The State Chamber of Commerce figured a bonus would cost about 140 million dollars.

The 1947 Pennsylvania Legislature approved a 500-million-dollar bonus bond issue proposal, but, before the plan can go into effect, it must be approved by the 1949 Legislature and in a State-wide vote.

Preservice Residents

BONUS BILLS or petitions are expected to be laid before lawmakers this year in Arizona, California, Colorado, Maine, Maryland, West Virginia and Delaware, and may be presented in Tennessee, Texas, New Jersey and Missouri.

The programs already in operation vary in detail. Under most of them, the checks go to men and women who served in the armed forces and who were bona fide residents of the State before they entered the service.

Amounts authorized range from $4,256,000 in Vermont to 400 million dollars in New York. The maximum sum that can be collected by a vet runs the scale from $100 in New Hampshire to $893 in Illinois. The Illinois average is $375.

The most common way to raise the money is a bond issue. Then new or higher taxes have to be imposed to pay the interest and principal on the bonds.

Twenty States provided bonuses in the wake of World War I. But the total came to only a bit more than 400 million dollars.

The Gallup Poll

Voters Lean to U. S. School Aid

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

FEDERAL aid to education along lines recommended by President Truman in his state of the Union speech has substantial support among representative voters. A recent survey, however, indicates that about one out of three feels that public school aid should be left entirely to individual States.

Institute interviewers last month asked some 3000 representative voters throughout the country several questions, the first of which was:

"The new Congress will be asked to vote about 300 million dollars a year to be distributed to the States for school aid. Do you think Congress should provide the money for this purpose—or should school aid be left up to each State?"

Opinions divided this way:

Congress should provide money	43%
Leave up to each State	33
No opinion	24
	100%

Considerable difference of opinion appears when the respondents are classified according to the amount of formal training they received. Almost twice as many who went to college approved Federal aid as do those with only grammar school training, as shown in this table:

Education	Should Provide	Leave to States	No Opin.
College	64%	30%	6%
High School	45	34	21
Grammar School	35	33	32

When asked to give their reasons, people favoring Federal aid to education say: Some States are financially unable to supply good schools and Government funds would help equalize educational opportunities; the Federal Government can afford to spend money on something like this since it is spending money for so many other things; it would help localities raise teachers' salaries.

The main argument of those who feel that the matter should be left to State governments is that each State has different needs and knows its own problems better than anyone else. Other reasons given include: Educational aid is too expensive a program for the Federal Government; States would do a better job of school aid than the National Government.

When it comes to financing school aid programs, the survey indicates that more people would be willing to pay higher taxes for that purpose than approve of Federally-financed aid.

"Would you be willing to pay higher taxes for school aid?"

They answered this way:

Willing to pay higher taxes	55%
Not willing	30
No opinion	15
	100%

Those who felt that Congress should pass the 300-million dollar aid bill were much more likely to be willing to pay higher taxes than those who favored leaving the matter up to States, as the following table shows:

	Favor Federal Aid	Favor State Aid	No Opin.
Willing to pay higher taxes	73%	49%	27%
Not willing to pay	19	39	38
No opinion	8	12	35
	100%	100%	100%

A similar survey taken last May, after the Taft bill had been passed by the Senate and while it was being considered by a House committee, showed 51 per cent of the people interviewed favoring Federal aid, 31 per cent in favor of leaving it up to States, 5 per cent giving qualified approval and 13 per cent expressing no opinion.

Newspaper War Brewing in Toronto

By Robert Bunnelle
Associated Press Staff Writer

TORONTO, Jan. 8.—C. George McCullagh is a cocky, two-fisted Irish-Canadian, handsome enough for the movies.

At 13 he was a newsboy in London, Ontario. At 43 he is publisher of two of Canada's biggest newspapers.

And he is starting a newspaper war that may be epic.

For 12 years publisher of the Toronto Globe and Mail, Canada's largest morning newspaper with a circulation of 218,000, McCullagh, on December 1, bought Toronto's Evening Telegram, circulation 198,000, for $3,610,000.

His first move was to challenge Toronto's only other paper, the Toronto Star, Canada's biggest evening newspaper with 369,000 circulation.

To Telegram employes wondering about his plans, McCullagh said his main objective frankly is to "knock off the Star." He doesn't like its shrewd, hard-hitting president, Harry Comfort Hindmarsh. He doesn't like its often extreme Liberal politics. And he doesn't like its spectacular editorial stunts or its way of playing news.

The Toronto Star is listed independent Liberal in politics; the Evening Telegram is listed independent Conservative. The Globe and Mail calls itself simply independent.

Depression Millionaire

THE career of C. (for Clement, which he never uses) George McCullagh is fabulous. Son of a cabinet maker, he quit school in his early teens to sell newspaper subscriptions. He did so well that he soon was called to Toronto to organize Globe circulation drives.

But the news side of newspapering fascinated him, and he became a financial writer. Then finance intrigued him, and he left the Globe in 1928 to join a brokerage house. They say he wisecracked to associates, "The next time I come in here, I'll be buying the paper from under you."

For eight years thereafter, including the depression '30s, McCullagh made money in the stock market—some say millions. And he made friends with William H. Wright, prospector who had struck it rich and had kept control of the gold mine he discovered, Wright-Hargreaves. McCullagh convinced Wright he should invest in the then faltering Globe with McCullagh as president and publisher for life under a trust arrangement.

Five weeks after McCullagh swung the purchase of the Globe—October 14, 1936—he bought the Mail and Empire, hated and bigger morning rival. He rolled the two papers into one and built a $3,500,000 plant from which to publish it.

The plant is characteristic of McCullagh. It could be right out of Hollywood. But besides its spacious, modern decor, it's also most efficient. It includes a private suite for the publisher, the bath of which is decorated in gold leaf.

Sharp Black and White

McCULLAGH is just over 6 feet tall, and athletic. His features are craggy. He has blue eyes and black wavy hair liberally brushed with gray. He is a sports lover, used to ride a lot, and has done well with his race horses. He is married and has a daughter and two sons.

He really runs his newspaper. Every day when in town he holds an editorial conference to map policies. They are McCullagh policies, for he sees things as black or white, rarely as gray. He's sure of himself.

Besides being cocky, McCullagh is quick of wit and colorful of language—frequently to the extent of unprintability. He is a great salesman. He sells himself. He sells people on supporting his paper, his ideas and his employment. He says what he thinks of anyone or anyone's ideas right out in forthright McCullaghese.

But if McCullagh doesn't pull his punches, he doesn't expect others to. Some years ago an American magazine carried an article about him as Canada's wonder boy, poking fun at the boastful pride he took in his prowess. McCullagh didn't get unduly angry. He just told the author: "Thanks for the piece. And if I'm that big a so-and-so, it's time I knew it."

Taking It Easier

HE DOESN'T hesitate to change his mind when judgment tells him to. For example, he had little use for the extremely able managing editor of the Mail and Empire, Robert Farquharson, when he combined it with the Globe in 1936. In 1941-42, however, when he needed special editorial administrative ability in building up the combined Globe and Mail, he called in Farquharson as managing editor. Now he fondly refers to him as "the guy who taught me all I know about journalism."

McCullagh has mellowed a lot in recent years. He delegates authority more and more and doesn't drive himself so much. But when there is occasion, he still pitches in with all his old-time intensity and determination.

In his resonant baritone, McCullagh says he wants to "build up the Telegram into the best evening paper in Canada" in opposition to the Star.

Services Are Held Again In War-Scarred Cathedral

WAR-SCARRED St. Stephen's Cathedral in Vienna, one of the glories of Gothic architecture in Europe, is holding religious services again.

The dome had been almost completely destroyed by German incendiaries during the Battle for Vienna in 1945, and the cathedral had been closed ever since.

Today part of the nave has been restored, with room for 7000 worshipers. A temporary wall separates the rebuilt part from the remainder of the church, which is still under repair.

All the bells of Vienna's churches pealed for an hour while Theodore Cardinal Innitzer officiated at St. Stephen's first high mass since the war.

Congress Is His New Career

AFTER one week of Congress, all his once reverent illusions about Washington aren't smashed but some of them are ruffled. Moving his wife and tots to Washington on New Year's Eve, he found the housing shortage here, well, you know!

It took some bipartisan cooperation to land him an unfurnished home in Arlington, Va. The staff of Senator Homer Capehart (R., Ind.) helped him find it. Last week Walsh was busy shuttling between his "temporary" offices, Room 22, Old House Office Building, and the House floor, with such time out as he could spare for house-hunting and "moving." Mrs. Walsh, who is "pretty ingenious that way," is still looking for furniture.

What are a typical new Congressman's typical reactions to Congress?

Walsh answered with three words: "Too much confusion."

He thinks Congress could accomplish much more with "more orderly processes."

The young Hoosier lost no time seeking out the counsel of older members. He learned there are three types of legislators, who have more or less successfully followed three routes to a legislative career.

He could become active socially, or as a good speaker he could shine on the floor, or he could work hard in committee, learn and grow.

He chose the last route.

"I'm a poor man, with a family to look out for," he said. "I haven't the time or inclination to be socially active. I plan to learn from the ground up in committee work before I have anything to say on the floor."

WHAT are his preferences in committees? He has entered alternative requests for either (1) the Armed Services Committee or (2) the Civil Service and Postoffice Committee.

He said he named Armed Services first because his district is proud of its own contribution to both forces—it has had more than its quota of generals and admirals.

If he doesn't get assigned to the Armed Services unit, Walsh said he would like to serve on the Civil Service and Postoffice Committee to "help strengthen the Civil Service system." He's in favor of "a fair pay raise for both departmental workers and postal employes."

A member is permitted service on a second so-called minor committee. For his second spot, Walsh practically set a precedent by saying he would like to be assigned to the Committee on Un-American Activities to "help do a job on procedures."

That committee, perennially under fire for its handling of witnesses and publicity methods, has received fewer membership applications than any of the rest.

Walsh said that's the reason he would like to serve on it.

On a business trip to Washington, he dropped in on public hearings of the group a few months ago and was "shocked" at the treatment given witnesses.

"Some say it ought to be abolished," he said. "I won't go along with that. But anyone who's studied law can see in a minute that an awful lot's wrong with its procedures. The Duggan case is a good example. An accused person ought to have a chance to redeem himself."

Walsh said one of the first things he would plug for if named to the committee was "the right of every accused person to cross-examine his accuser and call witnesses in rebuttal."

"And they ought to cooperate with, not compete with, the Justice Department," he said.

Eskimos and Indians will be included in the school's teaching staff. Because the average Eskimo speaks no English, a course in basic Eskimo will be part of the school's syllabus.

BOOKS

A new portrait of Thomas Costain by George Baer

Le Moynes Need No Fiction

Costain's Embroidery Is Wasted

By Sterling North

HIGH TOWERS. By Thomas B. Costain. Doubleday. 403 pp. $3.

HAD there been more families like the Le Moynes in North America, France might have held Canada and the Mississippi Valley against the English, and the history of our continent would have been vastly different.

Thomas B. Costain, who knows his Parkman and his Fregault and his Jesuit Relations, has dug into the archives at Montreal and at Ottawa for material to dramatize fully the lives of 3 of the 10 Le Moyne brothers: Charles, Pierre and Jean-Baptiste.

Were it not for Pierre (better known as d'Iberville) and Jean-Baptiste (better known as Bienville), the English would have held onto Hudson Bay with no hiatus in their fur trading, while some power other than France might have founded New Orleans.

Gilding the Lily

THERE is really no need for the elaborate fabricated plot here added to the saga of the Le Moynes. Their tale is fabulous without the addition of fantasy. I find myself very little interested in the widow Halay, who is supposed to have fallen in love with Bienville and returned to France to become a famous courtesan.

I am only slightly more interested in her child, Felicite, raised by the Le Moynes, who is simultaneously in love with the orphaned Philippe, beloved by Bienville and sold down the river to the villainous De Mariat, a totally unbelievable rascal.

As for the conjugal rape and torture and subsequent capture by Indians of the same Felicite, my reaction is, "Let's get back to what history tells us about Bienville and the other Le Moynes."

Possibly for the millions of readers addicted to romantic fiction, the Felicite theme is a necessity. And Costain is admittedly adept in weaving such a story.

Background Needed

BUT what I wanted in this book and didn't find was:

More about the fur trade, on which empires depended.

More about the actual labor, management and finance of such a seigneurie as that which the Le Moynes held across the river from Montreal.

A better picture of the feudal anachronisms which ultimately doomed France in its long struggle with the English.

And, finally, more historical background for the average reader to explain why the Iroquois and the English made it impossible for even the Le Moynes permanently to plant the lilies of France on North American soil.

The history of New France is, without the help of fiction, one of the most enthralling stories ever written. And the Le Moynes take a top place in that little known narrative.

I only wish that Mr. Costain had used his excellent material to write a nonfictional account of this fascinating family of brothers who will be remembered for more important matters than their attitude toward a pretty girl who never existed save in the brain of a writer of historical romance.

Government Assailed as An Employer

GOVERNMENT AS EMPLOYER. By Sterling Spero. Remsen Press. 1948. 487 pp.

DR. SPERO, a long-time student of public employment, is quite critical of the Government as an employer. Federal, State and local governments alike, he contends, deprive their employes of the right to strike, limit their rights as citizens, and allow political forces to prejudice both their security and their advancement.

In turn, he discusses the relationship between government—Federal, State or local—and its employes, the growth of trade unions in Government, and Government policies that affect collective bargaining, the closed shop, arbitration and the evolution of the labor movement among public employes.

Within 500 pages he packs an incredible amount of history, law and anecdote as to the growth of unions among Government employes and the curbs that have been placed upon them.

Throughout, the author sympathizes with the public employe. He questions forthrightly why governmental employes should be denied the right to strike. He laments their status as "limited citizens." And he deprecates the limited role which unions are permitted to play in the public service.

Yet, while his sympathies are clear, the book presents a relatively objective analysis of the problems of public employment. And above all it offers the most thorough and complete analysis of these problems to be found in print. Public personnel officers and congressional committees will find here a rich and detailed historical analysis of employer-employe relations in the public service.—JOHN J. CORSON.

Gore Vidal Stops Short Of Homicide

THE SEASON OF COMFORT. By Gore Vidal. Dutton. 253 pp. $3.

THE "Incest-Under-The-Magnolias" school of literature now has two distinct subdivisions:

1. The hound-dog-and-corn-likker specialists who range from the satirical to the pathological, or from Caldwell to Faulkner.

2. The Dixie Bunthornes, or delicate decadents, who range from the orchidaceous to the outrageous, or from Truman Capote to Gore Vidal.

Vidal, of course, isn't a Southerner by birth. In fact, many loyal Southerners will insist, after reading his brilliant but bitter chronicle of a perverse Southern family, that he must be a Republican damyankee.

Whichever section claims the author, however, it is only fair to admit his genius. Still in his midtwenties, he is the author of four unusual novels dealing principally with characters who would have interested Krafft-Ebing and Eugene O'Neill of the "Mourning Becomes Electra" period.

In fact, the theme of "The Season of Comfort" is very close to the tragedy of the house of Atreus utilized by Homer, Pindar, Aeschylus, Sophocles, Euripides and O'Neill. The father-daughter, mother-son, sister-brother relationships all verge upon the incestuous, though Vidal, using more restraint than his classic models, brings in his climax just short of murder.

GORE VIDAL
. . . He makes the abnormal real

Briefly, the story is a study of cumulative perversion accentuated for three generations. The Vice President dislikes his secretly alcoholic wife, admires and and loves his spoiled daughter, is cold toward his son, who in turn is uncommonly attached to his mother.

Charlotte, the daughter, thinks of her father as God, hates her mother, and when she has a son gives him the affection she is never able to give either of her husbands or her many lovers. But she is also intent upon destroying what she loves.

The mother-son relationship, which has produced what Philip Wylie calls "Momism" in America, is treated with intelligent intensity and great bitterness by Mr. Vidal, who in previous books has suggested that carried to this extreme it produces pathological, frustrated young men of indeterminate sex headed for lives of almost certain misery. In this book, the young hero at last breaks with his mother in a scene seldom equaled for dramatic power in modern fiction.

I find myself disliking intensely virtually every character in Gore Vidal's novels. His books cry out for a normal human being here and there if only by way of contrast. But there can be no doubt about the reality of his creatures. They furnish the evil motivation for most of the misery in our frustrated world.

An Old Problem in Terrible Form

Cover of this month's issue of The Atlantic, containing Dr. Conant's article

Their argument says in effect, "In the next decade the Russians will have perfected their instruments of mass destruction; let's smash 'em now before they're ready." This reasoning of those who wish to force Russia to fight now might seem attractive at first sight to all who pride themselves on being hardheaded. I suggest that it is vulnerable, however, on realistic grounds.

Basically the argument for a preventive war fails to consider the fundamental nature of the struggle which underlies the present uneasy armed truce with the Soviet Union. We need to probe deeply into the question of what the Soviets' ambition would be if and when they have weapons of mass destruction in sufficient quantity and are ready with suitable methods of delivery.

I think it extremely probable that the men who rule Russia do not dream of a military victory over the United States followed by an occupation and control by Russian commissars, but rather a revolution in this country which would result in a totalitarian socialistic state with native American rulers. Once this is accomplished, the Russian dream appears to foretell, the world revolution is achieved and the Utopian aspects of communism are possible.

I think the Russians now accept their Marx-Engels-Lenin doctrine with fanatic seriousness. If my assumption about the nature of the thinking in the Kremlin be admitted, it follows that the over-all strategy of the United States must be aimed primarily at preserving the type of free society we have inherited from the past and now enjoy. Our open society rests on a fundamental moral basis; once we destroy this basis, we have destroyed the essence of this Nation.

If I am right about my analysis of war and peace, any acceptance of the doctrine that the end justifies the means would be the moral equivalent of dropping atomic bombs on a dozen of our own cities. For us to develop a Machiavellian foreign policy which would culminate in our launching a surprise attack on the Soviet Union or declaring war for the purpose of a destruction of their armament would negate the very premises on which our culture rests. In short, it seems to me the moral argument against a preventive war is by no means softheaded, but rather a realistic appraisal of the fundamental issue which divides the world.

Let me make it plain, I am not advocating any policy of appeasement in regard to the present. The whole problem of our strategy for the months immediately ahead is another matter. If the Soviets force us into war by their own actions, that is another story. What I am opposing is the notion that we should precipitate a war a few years hence in order to beat the enemy to the punch in this matter of weapons of mass destruction.

Panic as a Weapon

WE HAVE been told by more than one authority who has access to governmental secrets that sometime in the 1950's Russia will probably be able to produce atomic bombs. Assuming this prophecy to be true, one may well ask: How is the United States to survive as a free society in such a hideous era? But another question has priority: How will the rulers of Soviet Russia use the threat of their possession of atomic weapons (if and when they have them) to forward their own ends?

What would you do if you were living in the Kremlin and were a firm believer in the Marx-Engels-Lenin doctrine which includes the idea that the eventual triumph of communism is scientifically assured? I suggest that first of all you would prepare defensively against the possibility that a "preventive war" party in the United States might develop and gain control, and a "superblitz" from North America to Russia might some day come. Second, you would lead the United States to believe that Russia was well prepared offensively to attack that country by a "superblitz," hoping thereby to cause panic among the people. One might feel certain that the citizens of a free society, sufficiently disturbed and frightened, in their frantic attempts to ward off military damage would wreck their economy, their social structure, and eventually their political framework.

If there be any merit in this analysis of mine, those in whose hands will rest the determination of the military policy of the United States a few years hence may have to solve a most baffling problem. On the one hand the United States must be well prepared for war in the age of atomic bombs, of a "superblitz;" on the other, we must see that the methods used in such preparation do not lead to the very ends that the Russians may have in mind: namely, a breakdown of our economy, of our political system, with the consequent internal destruction of our Nation.

Walking a Knife Edge

TO ME it means we must deliberately refrain from taking out all the forms of military insurance that may come to mind. For example, to do everything that could be thought of to insure against destruction of our cities might involve such drastic shifts in our whole life as to destroy our national being. Even in terms of dollars and cents I believe military preparedness could wreck us.

If I were sitting in the Kremlin, I should have great faith in the power of an inflation to ruin the United States. One way to cause a runaway inflation is surely to spend too freely and too fast on military equipment. Already, perhaps, one can smell danger in the air.

There has been a considerable amount of talk about the atomic age. It may be argued that we shall not be living in that age until two or more powers have atomic bombs in sufficient quantity to constitute a military menace to each other. If and when this time comes, those who are responsible for spending this Nation's resources on military matters will be confronted with the century-old problem of force and freedom in a new and terrible form.

They must walk a perilous knife edge: on the one side will be inadequate defensive and offensive military power, the possibility of outmoded strategic concepts and antiquated equipment; on the other will be the precipice which drops to domestic ruin—the destruction of the basis of a free society.

I see no escape from the fact that in planning for this possible future we must take some calculated risks. And the calculations will be difficult indeed. They involve the analysis of a complex situation, an appraisal of many technical and military factors. A vast amount of staff work by professionals must provide the necessary data. Fortunately we have high talent in the military establishment and men of wide vision and imagination.

But the rules of war must never be allowed to dominate the ethics of our people. Control must be in civilian hands. The basic judgments must be made by the voters and transmitted by them through Congress to the President and his civilian Cabinet members.

If all concerned keep in the forefront of their minds the vital issue, the survival of our free society, then we may believe the eventual decisions will be sound. We must never falter in our faith in the moral basis of this republic. On these terms and these alone can we hope to resolve the paradox of force and freedom in an atomic age.

In a Nutshell

ON THE EDGE OF THE PRIMEVAL FOREST, and MORE FROM THE PRIMEVAL FOREST, by Albert Schweitzer. MacMillan. $4.50.

HERE are available again, in one volume, Schweitzer's memorable accounts of the eight years he spent of his first two trips to French Equatorial Africa to practice medicine. The author, an authority on Bach and the Bible as well as African aborigines, is now in Africa again as a medical and religious missionary. This book, even better than another new MacMillan reprint of his "The Quest of the Historical Jesus," explains why he is so highly revered as one of our most distinguished contemporaries. It's an absorbing picture, lightened with stories of the interpreter, who said a woman patient had a pain in her cutlet; of the replacement of native superstitions by the European brand among natives who wanted their horoscopes read.

LUIS KUTNER TRILOGY. A. Kroch & Son, Chicago.

BETWEEN the wallpaper covers of these books Mr. Kutner weaves religious themes saturated with inconsistency. On the one hand, he says, "If a man lives a holy life, he knows temperance, justice, courage, nobility and truth"; on the other, "The discontented have not tasted of the supreme combination of sex, power and love." There are nuggets of good verse, but enlightened editing is required. However, Mr. Kutner should begin by editing his thoughts.—J. K. B.

THE YOUNG HENRY ADAMS, by Ernest Samuels. (Harvard, $4.50.)

HENRY ADAMS wrote about himself in "The Education." It is, thanks in large part to what Samuels calls Adams' "obsessive interest in effectiveness of expression," one of our most absorbing books. But it is not, Samuels finds, wholly dependable. Adams was a better Harvard student than he later pretended, says Samuels; he was less of a Darwinian than he would want to be thought; it is probable that, despite his denial, he had at least heard of Marx and Comte; he was influenced by Guizot, historian and statesman with the get-rich philosophy, or cant, and by James Russell Lowell, from whom he learned "the interesting possibilities of sheer opinionativeness." Samuels doesn't make us like Adams and "The Education" any more or less, but he makes us like Samuels.

LAND OF MILK AND HONEY, by W. L. White. Harcourt, Brace. $3.

THE White campaign against the Reds began a couple of books back, after the author had made a couple of trips abroad. Now he has the news brought right to his door by a young Russian "who escapes to another world." As a youth in Moscow, White's hero learned unhappily the college girls prefer rich boys, that students can't afford theater tickets, and that if you actually plot against the government you may be arrested. Arriving in America, he is amazed that capitalists eat and dress well; that houses are painted and that New York is brightly lighted. White adds a romantic angle to the class angle in this edition, but otherwise it is all so familiar that it reads like a primer.

THE JACARANDA TREE, by H. E. Bates. Atlantic-Little, Brown. $2.75.

A MAN named Paterson, with a little Burmese boy named Tuesday to do some jobs for him and a very beautiful, sometimes naked Burmese girl named Nadia to do some other jobs, leads the lordly life of a white man among primitives until the Japanese put him to flight. What happens to them along the road forms the background for the romance of Paterson and Nadia. You've read most of it before . . . the jealous woman who can't displace the brown, the white man out to save his skin, the whites either much too noble or too nasty to live outside a book, or in.

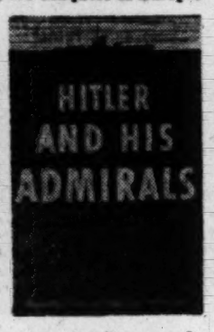
German Records Bear Witness

Hitler's Sea Blunders Detailed

By Marshall Andrews

HITLER AND HIS ADMIRALS, by Anthony K. Martienssen. E. P. Dutton. 275 pp. $4.

THE PART played by the German navy in World War II has been all but obscured by the emphasis on air and land warfare incident to the type of campaign necessary for conquest of Europe.



Yet it has been maintained by many military writers that Adolf Hitler's failure to understand the importance of seapower, and particularly his discounting the Mediterranean, cost him the war. It certainly is borne out by German official records that Hitler did not expect Britain to become an enemy and that this sort of thinking led him to enter a global war prepared only to fight in Europe.

It is upon these German records that this book is based. The records themselves have been published in other forms, but for the first time pertinent ones have been selected and tied together by a narrative which interprets them as well. The result is a naval history of Germany, probably more nearly accurate than history usually is, and shot through with the personalities of Hitler and his two admirals, Raeder and Doenitz.

No Naval Air Arm

THE GERMAN documents and Martienssen's narrative reveal these errors, omissions and miscalculations on the part of the Nazi high command which very likely cost them the war:

The separation of German aviation from the other services was so complete that the navy had no aviation upon which it could rely and none of its own. Doenitz is seen complaining, early in 1943, that Allied countermeasures against his U-boats were succeeding and blaming this on lack of adequate aviation.

German failure to capture and hold Malta, an event which permitted a most valuable base to remain in British hands and denied a vital base to Germany. This failure resulted from reliance upon air power to interdict this island and refusal to seize it by a seaborne invasion.

Inability, because of naval weakness, to conquer the British Isles. An invasion of England was planned as Operation Sea Lion and was not abandoned until January, 1942, after repeated postponements and after Germany had become deeply involved in Russia. By then, also, the inability of air power alone to conquer England had been demonstrated and the islands remained as the base from which the Continent eventually was liberated.

Destroyer Deal 'Interpreted'

THAT THE high command felt from the very beginning the fatal effects of ignoring seapower is repeatedly demonstrated in these documents. Even while Sea Lion was under consideration, Hitler favored occupation of Dakar and the Azores and Canary Islands. This feat, for lack of a navy, could only have been done by air, and there was some question whether the occupation could be maintained by air supply. Raeder, however, felt that submarines could supply everything except aircraft fuel, and that tankers could refuel the Azores and Canaries from Spain (which had not joined the Axis).

An interesting bit of German philosophy is revealed in discussions of the Azores-Canaries venture. The swap of United States destroyers for British bases came up for discussion and the Germans were unable to decide whether this was really a step to help England or to promote American interests.

They concluded that:

"The leased islands are of great significance to the U. S. A. They represent a considerable gain in prestige and a decisive step forward in the pursuit of the Pan-American objective. The possibility of exerting influence on the South American countries is increased."

The high command is shown to have felt that the United States would not support England with "significant" amounts of material but might occupy the Spanish and Portuguese Atlantic islands. They saw American fears of air attack from West Africa as propaganda leading up to such action.

"Hitler and His Admirals" is the chronological story of failure. It is a type of failure to which the United States could become victim should its people permit themselves to be turned from the realities of modern warfare on a global front.

Wholesome Memoirs

Pater Was a Problem But He Got Results

Cheaper by the Dozen. By Frank Gilbreth, Jr., and Ernestine Gilbreth Carey. Crowell. 237 pp. $3.

ERNESTINE FRANK, Jr.

TAKE "Life With Father" and "I Remember Mama," add enough spirited children to make an even dozen; salt with humor sharper than Clarence Day's, and you have the palatable concoction distilled from nostalgic memory by 2 of the 12 Gilbreth children.

No modern father will believe that Frank B. Gilbreth (a recent enough paterfamilias to have been a world renowned innovator of scientific factory management) could—

(a) Whistle "assembly" and have every one of his children at the front door in less than 30 seconds.

(b) Insist that all 12 learn touch typing by his method in two weeks—and achieve his aim.

(c) Attend all dances and go on all early dates with his eldest daughter—and often become the life of the party.

(d) Ram languages, astronomy and a dozen other advanced studies down the throats of his preadolescent offspring and—

(e) Still be adored and mourned by the youngsters he spanked, regimented and educated.

Mother Had a Hand

MAYBE "progressive" educators and "now-dear-don't-shoot-grandpa" parents will resent father Gilbreth. He was a problem. He was something of a bully and something of a martinet. But in his home and in the factories he streamlined, he achieved remarkable results.

And none of the 12 Gilbreth children was a juvenile delinquent. In fact, they turned out to be remarkably successful and happy human beings.

Frank and Ernestine do not romanticize their early home life. They are very clear-eyed about both parents, not to mention their 10 brothers and sisters. But neither do they wail and brood and whine like so many of our "World-I-Never-Made" environmental apologists.

Part of the reason may be Mother Gilbreth, who never spanked and never regimented and was an equally famous efficiency engineer in her own right.

After bearing 12 children, she outlived her husband a quarter of a century and carried on the highly specialized business of "motion study" in complicated technological processes. But like most mild and reasonable people, she seems less a "character" than her positive and difficult husband.

Jehu With Horns

NEITHER Glasscock nor Partridge have written so amusingly of the early gasoline age. The Gilbreths had a right-hand drive Pierce-Arrow with three horns. Father Gilbreth could blow all three and shout "road hog" simultaneously while burning up the highway like Barney Oldfield. When anyone remarked about the children-loaded vehicle, father would quip, "They come cheaper by the dozen."

Life in Montclair, N. J., and Nantucket just before, during and after World War I becomes as clear as the Gilbreth analyses of lost motion in this remarkable memoir of an era which at least in retrospect seems less neurotic, better balanced and happier than our own.

I hope this book sells a million copies. I hope it is read aloud in at least that many families. It is wholesome without being sentimental; honest without being offensive; nostalgic without being senile; funny without being cheap. But it may make a problem of father.

STERLING NORTH.

New 'Woodrow Wilson Room' A Rare Unit

DEDICATION of the Woodrow Wilson Room at the Library of Congress yesterday gives that institutions one of the few complete presidential libraries in the United States.

The books and papers of most of the Presidents are still in private hands, or scattered, or lost. Among those preserved as a unit are the Rutherford B. Hayes collection at Fremont, Ohio, and the Franklin D. Roosevelt Library at Hyde Park, N. Y.

The Library of Congress has the bulk of the papers and books of Thomas Jefferson, and the Wilson collection gives it another unit. The latter includes the papers of the World War I President, placed in the Library by Mrs. Wilson in 1939 and kept in the manuscript division, and his personal library, which she gave to the institution in 1946 and which is shelved in the room just dedicated.

Liked Wordsworth

THE President's library includes some 9000 volumes, chiefly in the fields of English and American history, political science and literature. In literature, the President's tastes seem to have run to Wordworth and one or two of the other English romantic poets.

The library also reflects the President's interest in law, contemporary essays and belles lettres.

Though there are some rare books in the collection, according to Vincent L. Eaton, assistant chief of the rare book division, the library is essentially that of a man to whom books were tools, rather than the library of a collector.

The books range from those the President used as a youth to those given to him by admirers in his last years.

In many of the books he inscribed his name. In the books of his youth the signature differs, for he used several variations, including "Thomas W. Wilson," before dropping his first name and settling on "Woodrow Wilson."

In a Latin-English lexicon, he wrote the following doggerel in 1874, when he was 17:

Do not steal this book my gallant friend
For fear the gallows will be your end!

THOS. WILSON.

Each book of the President contains his bookplate, which shows a shelf of books, a facsimile of his signature and a quotation he composed himself:

Council and Light
Knowledge with Vision
And Strength and Life and Pleasure withal.

Another bookplate was made for the President after his retirement. It showed a picture of him with the Church of Notre Dame in the background, but he never used the plate.

Latest Jalna Book Is Weak At Both Ends

MAZO DE LA ROCHE
. . . She shuts out the world

MARY WAKEFIELD. By Mazo de la Roche. Atlantic-Little, Brown. 337 pp. $3.

ELEVEN-Jalna-books-and-two-million-copies ago, an unknown Canadian author was awarded the Atlantic $10,000 novel prize. Knowing a good story when she had sold one, the indefatigable Miss de la Roche has made a lifetime profession of telling more stories about the same family.

"Mary Wakefield" is the second instalment in point of family chronology and deals with the least-known addition to the clan, Philip Wakefield's second wife, Mary, the mother of Piers, Eden, Finch and Wakefield (all yet to be born as this novel closes).

The drama in this segment, as the reader may well imagine, is the struggle between the indomitable Adeline Whiteoak, mother of Philip, and the gentle Mary (brought to Jalna as a governess for Philip's motherless children, Meg and Rennie).

Irresistible force meets immovable object as the two women, mother and prospective wife, battle in their completely different ways for the affection of the heir to Jalna. And the author, true to her time-tested technique, throws all the classic complications between these natural mates before allowing wedding bells to ring.

The question naturally arises, "What has kept the series alive and profitable for 21 years, thus achieving a record in recent fiction?"

(1) Jalna is timeless, nostalgically secure in a world of change and fleeting values. It is the family seat, the homestead, the castle of refuge.

(2) Despite their quarrels, the Whiteoaks are a clan with strong family loyalties. Subconsciously we yearn for this lost cohesion.

(3) The Whiteoaks, with a few exceptions, are positive, forthright, dog-and-horse-loving extroverts who are refreshingly free from the need for psychoanalysts. The Jalna books are a relief after the caterwauling of self-commiserating young aesthetes. And because the Whiteoaks are positive, they furnish conflict and emotional excitement and thus dramatic values.

(4) Jalna (in Ontario) is a happy transatlantic step between the life of a county family in England or Ireland and that on some big farm in the United States, a halfway house in the Anglo-Saxon, Anglo-Irish, Anglo-American tradition of country living.

The opening chapters and the closing ones of this particular instalment of the Jalna saga are not up to the usual de la Roche level. The first part is too expository, the last winds up too many of the obviously fabricated plot complications. But the main body of the book holds the reader with what at the very least must be considered a well-told romance.—S. N.

7000 Years of Neglected History

N. Africa Finds a Loving Voice

By Richard L. Coe

North African Prelude, by Galbraith Welch. Morrow. 650 pp. $6.

FOR ALL THE VOLUMES detailing the Spanish-French-Italian-Greek side of the Mediterranean, there are precious few easily available about the North African side. In "North African Prelude" Galbraith Welch traces for us, in 650 event-packed pages, this unbelievably fascinating strip of land.

Here is not only a labor of love—no one who knows Africa can help loving it—but also a store of scholarship which should command even the respect of scholars. For, strangely enough, this is the first one-volume work to cover 7000 years of history from the Gold Coast to the Red Sea. More than that, it is as readable as its subject is gripping.

With such an immense panorama to draw—and in popular, readable style—Mrs. Welch has been judicious in her choice of incidents. Periods and countries of which much is known she merely touches. She dwells at length on the early years of Islam in Africa, history revealed almost entirely through the pages of Arabic chroniclers.

"It was," she points out, "an age of barbaric splendor, nauseating cruelty, unlifted spiritual sacrifice, desperate adventures and vast opportunities . . . Always," she concludes, "the limitless love of Allah for which men died gladly; across every bloody scene was the cry to prayer."

It is this religious aspect of Africa which is so often missed by its visitors, and had Mrs. Welch's book been available to the millions of soldiers who touched its shores during World War II, how much they would have gained from this incredible continent so many of them hated. As it is, that very lack inspired Mrs. Welch to her sturdy task.

Spur to Nationalism

THE RECENT war, she remarks, "went everywhere. On the Red Sea, up and down the Atlantic Coast, in Senegal and in the Sahara, as well, of course, as all along the Mediterranean, Africans watched Christians killing one another. . . . Africa saw, displayed right under her nose, proof of the human feebleness and folly of those who had set themselves up as her tutors and masters, of those whom Moslem Africa—classing them together as 'the Christians'—had viewed as supermen in the practical things of the world.

"Africa, lazily perhaps, had let herself depend on Europe, disgruntled at the loss of independence and resting and avoiding responsibility—as often she had done before—by submitting to foreign leadership. Suddenly she saw this leadership disintegrate. The immediate impression was a startling disillusionment and a flare of nationalism."

With this as "Prelude's End," Mrs. Welch takes you through the glories of Egypt, 50 centuries of power on the Nile, through the surge of the crescent across the Western desert, on the hair-raising excursions across the Sahara, where at journey's end one exchanges salt for gold. You Watch the shift from legends into history. You learn of the founding of such cities as Kairouan (outside of which the Ninth Air Force improvised landing fields in 1943) and Timbuctoo, whose "golden roofs" so intrigued Europe a few hundred years ago.

The enthusiasm of the author for her subject is evident in every paragraph. While she manages to stick closely to her sweeping pattern, she frankly enjoys dishing up intimate details about such vivid figures as Moulay Ismail, who wore yellow when in a killing mood, or Pearl-Spray, who went from the harem of Bagdad to become Queen of the Moslems in Egypt, or of Kankan-Musa, whose pilgrimage in 1324 from the Sudan to Mecca rivaled the more famous journey of Sheba.

Though on occasion her style tends to be winsomely erudite, one cannot help sharing her understandable enthusiasm. Mrs. Welch has chosen a massive subject, and if the reading of history brings to you the rare comforts of perspectives, "North African Prelude" is a book you'll treasure. Nor can one help being grateful to Mrs. Welch for the lifetime of interest and the six years of research and writing which have made her completed work worthy of her grand design.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

FRANCIS COLEMAN ROSENBERGER of Alexandria, editor of "Virginia Reader, a Treasury of Writings From the First Voyage to the Present," has signed a contract with Dutton for a new anthology—a collection of writings about Thomas Jefferson.

Rosenberger, who has long hankered to do the book, says it will run about 175,000 words and range from the ruminations of Jefferson's contemporaries to the pontification of modern biographers.

Yeats, As in Yates

ANENT the proper pronunciation of William Butler Yeats' surname, which was brought up in this column a fortnight ago when I said his fellow poet George Russell (AE) rhymed it with Keats, Richard Ellman, author of "Yeats, The Man and the Masks," writes me:

"AE was the only one of Yeats' friends who always called him Yeets (like Keats); Yeats himself, his wife and family, and everybody else who knew him called him 'Yates.'

"I think it's very amusing that AE should have insisted that his pronunciation was the right one, in the teeth of all custom. It's characteristic of him."

Fine Distinction

THE Journal of Modern History (University of Chicago) advises the Public Affairs Press that it is unable to review the latter's book, "The Truman Program" because:

"It is the policy of the Journal to review books dealing with the United States only insofar as they involve relations with the rest of the world."

When Mr. Truman talks about atomic energy, communism and miscellaneous matters of foreign policy, he is evidently talking to himself.

Riding the Cushions

SINCE manuscripts of the importance of the Lacock Abbey Magna Carta of Anno 1225 do not get moved around every day, I went over to the Library of Congress and asked Alvin W. Kremer, keeper of the collections, about it. Kremer accompanied A. J. Collins, keeper of manuscripts in the British Museum, as far as New York with it—the first lap of the manuscript's journey back to London following a two-year showing here.

Collins was a little nervous, Kremer said, and when they boarded a night train to New York hesitated about letting the Secret Service escort sit up all night watching it. In the end he was persuaded to get a night's sleep, however.

In the morning they hurried from the station to the Cunard-White Star ship with the manuscript in its walnut case. They proceeded to the ship's strong room, where several piles of mattresses were stored. Collin's spirits rose visibly when he saw the mattresses—just the place to keep a 700-year-old manuscript. So it presumably rode to England in the middle of a stack of mattresses, cushioned against pitch and toss.

With that out of the way, Collins and Kremer had tea, which turned out to be, in Kremer's case, coffee.

District to See Paintings of Hyde Park

Roosevelt's Home Rivals Washington's as a Shrine

IN THE brief 32 months that Franklin D. Roosevelt's beloved Hyde Park home has been open to the public, the majestic mansion, with its commanding view of the Hudson, has become one of the Nation's foremost shrines.

Rivaling Independence Hall and Mount Vernon in attracting pilgrimaging visitors, since its dedication as a national monument in April, 1946, the estate where F. D. R. was born and where he lies buried has already been admired with awe by nearly a million and a half persons.

In cool weather, the chill winds which rustle the oaks, elms and spruces surrounding the great field stone and stucco mansion might be expected to deter visitors. But in October, 43,889 men, women and children trod quietly along the hemlock-hedged paths to the rose garden where the Nation's thirty-first President lies under a gleaming white slab of Vermont marble, or peered solemnly into the bedroom in the south wing where Fala's leash and collar lie across the chair.

National Park Service records show that by the end of last November 1,389,899 persons had visited the 33-acre estate which F. D. R. deeded to the Government two years before his death as a national historical site.

In the paintings reproduced on this page, Artist Ruth Perkins Safford of Washington accurately depicts the interior of the F. D. R. mansion which the Roosevelt family called "the big house."

Here, painted in its impressive architectural beauty, is the library where F. D. R. began his famous radio "fireside chats;" the dining room where the President and Mrs. Roosevelt entertained the King and Queen of England; the "snuggery" where F. D. R.'s mother loved to sit surrounded by family mementos.

• Exterior of the "big house" at Hyde Park

Mrs. Safford, who executed these paintings in gouache, a pigment of egg-white mix and watercolor, gave to them a special love of architecture. In addition to her paintings, which have been exhibited widely, she designed her own home at 2821 Dumbarton ave., where she lives with her husband, Navy Capt. Laurance Frye Safford.

Special arrangements were made for her to paint these scenes at Hyde Park. She worked eight and nine-hour days for two months to complete them at the F. D. R. mansion, while a constant procession of visitors passed by to look in at the roped-off rooms.

These paintings will have their first general exhibit here from January 10 through January 29, at the Arts Club of Washington, 2017 I st. nw., in connection with the inauguration ceremonies for President Truman.

"We think many people will be coming to Washington for the inauguration who would want to go to Hyde Park to view that lovely estate, but will not be able to do so," said Mrs. Safford. "This will give them some opportunity to see what it is like."

At Hyde Park, Mrs. Safford gave almost all her painting attention to the interior of the 40-room, ivy-covered mansion, for much of the remainder of the estate has been frequently portrayed by photographs.

Not shown here is the carriage house, hothouse, rose garden or the rest of the grounds, which overlook a broad valley in a picturesque region described by Explorer Henry Hudson in 1609 with the words, "It is as beautiful a land as one could tread upon."

LIBRARY—This huge room, occupying a wing added to his Hyde Park home by Franklin Delano Roosevelt in 1915, is where he originated his famed "fireside chats." The tall governor's chairs, done in red leather, were gifts of the State of New York. Over the fireplace is a Gilbert Stuart portrait of Dr. Isaac Roosevelt, the late President's great grandfather. Roosevelt used the desk in the corner to work on his stamp collection. Through the window may be seen the porch and main entrance. The blue porcelain vases, high on either side of the chimney, were brought from the Far East

DINING ROOM—Here King George VI and Queen Elizabeth of England were entertained. The President's chair, purchased by his mother, Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, is at the right of the dining table. It has a design similar to the Roosevelt crest

BEDROOM—A telephone at his bedside was connected directly to the White House in Washington, and with it President Roosevelt kept in close touch with world events during his visits to his Hyde Park home. His last copy of "Time," the news magazine, is on the table in front of the window. His slippers and bathrobe are on the chaise longue. The armchair at extreme right was Falla's favorite sleeping place and the dog's leash and collar remain there. The pictures are part of FDR's large collection of ship pictures. His Navy coat is on the chair near the window

SNUGGERY—Mrs. Sara Roosevelt, the President's mother, called this the "snuggery," a small writing room which she used as her private sitting room. Her desk and chair are at extreme left. Family portraits of her grandchildren are on the mantel. The room abounds with knick-knacks from many lands

Conzelman Leaves Door Open on Skins

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

DAVE SHAPIRO, the George Washington U. cocaptain who led New York gamblers into a police trap in their bribery attempt, is delaying a decision to appear on a "We the People" radio program until university officials ascertain his fee won't jeopardize his amateur status . . . that "modest dividend" announced by the Washington Baseball Club after its 1948 operations amounted to $4 per share for the stockholders, or 8 per cent of the market value of their stock. The club's stock, which has a par value of $10, sold for $50 per share in the latest transactions . . . the pro basketball players are complaining about the standard Pullman berth of 6 feet 3 inches. Kleggie Hermsen, center of the Caps, who is 6 feet 9 inches, moans, "a lot of us sleep doubled up." One New York hotel, the Paramount, is soliciting business from the basketball teams by advertising "special beds for tall players" . . . When he quit as head coach of the Chicago Cardinals the other day, Jimmy Conzelman had fulfilled only one season of a two-year contract but he coached the club in six seasons previously without any kind of a contract . . . his likeliest successor is Assistant Coach Phil Handler, who replaced Conzelman for two years during the war . . . when Texas was selected as the opponent of Georgia in the Orange Bowl, Miami critics called Texas a third-rate team. After his 41-28 defeat, Coach Wally Butts of Georgia wryly described Texas as "the best third-rate team I've ever seen."

POVICH

AMONG the stumbling blocks to the Redskins' negotiations with Frank Leahy, the Notre Dame coach, is his revenue from noncoaching sources. His basic salary at Notre Dame is only $12,500, but he drew $15,000 last season as a radio commentator and was paid $5,000 for his syndicated newspaper articles . . . Wally Butts, who was also offered the Redskins' head coaching job, will give them a decision after January 20, he said . . . Newsweek magazine had pungent comment on the college basketball games at Madison Square Garden in its issue just before the G. REPRESENTATIVE F. A Republican-dominated judiciary committee failed to report out Hebert's bill in the last session but he likes its chances under Democrat auspices . . . Baseball—How about that ballplayer's wife who attempted to console him during a long batting slump by cooing to him "you still have me, darling," and was told, "Yeah, I'd have traded you a couple of times today for a base hit" . . . Ed Klieman, Joe Haynes and Ed Robinson, the three players obtained by the Washington club from the Indians, all were offered raises in their 1949 contracts. There will be no difficulty signing Haynes, whose wife is a considerable stockholder in the Nats . . . the Washington club, desperate for a shortstop, can find no solace in the memory that its Chattanooga farm team once brushed off a rookie who asked for a pass to the game for his girl friend. He quit to join the Cardinals. His name was Marty Marion, and still is.

BONES McKINNEY of the Caps is featured in action on the current cover of Collier's, and the March issue of Sport Magazine will offer a full-length story on McKinney with Technicolor photographs . . . He reported to the Nats last spring via the Australian crawl when his brother-in-law's boat burst into flames . . . on the day the $50,000 Mexican Futurity drew 30,000 fans at La Hippodromo track in Mexican City, the bull fights up the street drew 60,000 . . . He Admits Offer, Does Not Flatly Reject It

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Jimmy Conzelman, coach of the Chicago Cardinals until last Friday, was offered the job of Washington Redskin coach last night and didn't specifically turn it down.

Conzelman, a featured guest at the annual Touchdown Club banquet at the Hotel Statler, admitted he received a proposition by President George Marshall of the Redskins during the banquet.

Asked if he flatly rejected the offer, Conzelman said:

"I didn't take the job, but maybe I left the door open."

The offer to Conzelman was the Redskins' second serious effort to find a successor for Turk Edwards, now moved into the front office as executive vice president. Paul (Bear) Bryant of Kentucky recently asked that his name be withdrawn for consideration for the job.

It was during a lull in Touchdown Club speeches that Redskin officials cornered Conzelman. They had previously said there might be an important anonuncement during the annual event and Conzelman's acceptance of the job would have come at an ideal time for the publicity-wise 'Skin bosses.

Despite Conzelman's statement that he "left the door open," observers could see little chance of the versatile mentor accepting a post in Washington.

In his letter of resignation at Chicago he said he was getting out of coaching in order to devote full time to his duties with a St. Louis advertising agency.

It was pointed out that Conzelman might be in a position to demand more money than the Redskins would care to offer; it didn't seem sensible for him to leave the winning Cardinals for the uncertain Redskins. His Chicago teams have won the western division, National Football League title twice in a row and the league championship in 1947.

Marshall, however, made a big joke of the whole thing.

"Of course, we made Conzelman an offer," he said. "I told him he could coach the Redskins if he paid us $50,000 a year. I even said I'd throw in 20 season tickets."

Marshall's $50,000 reference was to a rumor concerning another offer to Conzelman, probably from the Boston Yanks.

Two other veteran coaches were special guests of the Redskins at last night's dinner. From William and Mary came Rube McCray and from Norfolk came a longtime friend of Marshall's, former Maryland coach Frank Dobson.

McCray's presence, in the light of his coaching preference for the single-wing formation while the Redskins are sticking to the T-formation, was explained by the fact that three Redskin draftees played with his club last season. The 'Skins would like McCray to exert his influence in the signing of Center Tommy Thompson, and Ends Lou Hoitsma and Pat Haggerty.

Meanwhile in Chicago two candidates were being boomed for Conzelman's former job with the Cardinals. Luke Johnsos, line coach of the Chicago Bears, was thought to have an inside track along with Blair Cherry, head coach of the University of Texas.

Caps Spurt To Snap Jets' Skein, 89-81

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Until late in the third period at Uline Arena last night the rejuvenated Indianapolis Jets had grandiose dreams of extending their surprise winning streak to four games.

Then for the edification of 2850 of the faithful, the Washington Caps put on a withering scoring spurt that soon gave them a 16-point lead and eventually the ball game, 89-81.

It was the halfway mark for the league-leading Caps and their convincing finish enabled them to post an enviable mark of 25 victories in 30 games.

If they play only .500 ball from here on in, they'll wind up with a .667 percentage that should be good enough to take the Eastern Division crown of the Basketball Association of America.

Jets Wilt in Third Period

The Jets, who came to town boasting victories over New York, Boston and Rochester, doggedly stayed close and the Caps led by only 55-51 with four minutes left in the third quarter.

Freddie Scolari, who went on to finish high man for the winners with 15, then dropped two calculated set shots. Big Jack Nichols took the cue and the impressive newcomer from the West Coast went on a 5-point scoring splurge.

Johnny Norlander, who made five baskets in all, added one of them and the score suddenly was 66-54, Caps, as the period ended.

Bob Feerick, right behind Scolari with 14, started the last session with a basket and Scolari came through with two more. Dick Schulz drove in for two additional field goals to run the score to 78-62, the widest margin the Caps enjoyed.

Indianapolis braced and managed to keep things interesting by actually outscoring the Caps, 27-23, in that last period.

Ray Lumpp's 17 points paced the Big Names On Display At Banquet

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

To the delight of the fellows who foot their bills—the spectators and taxpayers—the big brass of military, government and football passed in review last night at the Touchdown Club's annual awards dinner in the Statler Hotel.

There were Supreme Court Justices, admirals, generals, Cabinet members and other top-drawer personalities, all assembled to pay tribute to the gridiron heroes of 1948.

Heading the football parade were Charlie Justice, North Carolina's All-America halfback; Bill Fischer, Notre Dame's captain and All-America guard; Steve Van Buren, the Philadelphia Eagles' one-man gang, and Otto Graham, quarterback star of the Cleveland Browns.

Small Fry Get Big Kick

They were the big boys, but the small fry, fellows like Gonzaga Prep's Bill Haley and Central High's Jimmy Pantos, had their innings also and probably got the biggest wallop out of the whole festive occasion.

To Justice, the cannonballing Choo-Choo from Asheville, N. C., who led the Tar Heels to the Sugar Bowl, went the evening's biggest prize, the Walter Camp Memorial Trophy, the award presented to the Touchdown Club's choice as the outstanding college football player of the year.

Fischer received the Knute Rockne Memorial Trophy, presented to the country's top collegiate lineman. Graham was awarded the All-American Conference Cup for being selected the conference's top player, and Van Buren received a similar award for being chosen the National Football League's most outstanding player.

Graham Lauds Team's Attitude

There were speeches by men accustomed to making speeches—Supreme Court Justice Douglas, Admiral Bill Halsey and Jennings Randolph, former Congressman, but the speech of the night was made by Graham.

Before modestly accepting his trophy "in behalf of my Cleveland teammates who made this award possible," Graham departed from the usual "think you" routine to voice a plea for tolerance and unity.

"On our championship Cleveland team," he said, "we have white players and Negro players, and players with many different religions. We don't judge a player by his race, color, creed, or background—he's simply rated on his ability.

"It's the best spirit I've seen on any team I've ever played on. It would be truly wonderful if that same spirit were worldwide."

Jimmy Conzelman, who recently resigned as coach of the Chicago Cardinals, was unable to offer his usual repartee and banter because of a bad cold and laryngitis.

The gray-shocked Conzelman limited his remarks to a very few words in presenting the National League trophy to Van Buren. In recalling his Cards' loss to the Eagles in the snow for NFL title, Conzelman likened Van Buren to the slogan of the United States hail service.

"Neither sleet nor rain nor snow can stop this courier in the daily

Penn Upsets Yale; Lavelli Scores 27

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 8 (AP).—The University of Pennsylvania's basketball team upset Yale, 72-62, tonight in an Eastern Intercollegiate League basketball game. It was the Blue's first setback in three circuit starts.

Although Tony Lavelli, Yale's brilliant star, tallied 27 points, he and his teammates were off in their shooting and game. Lavelli connected for six field goals out of about 20 shots and hit for 15 free throws in 19 tosses.

Hoyas Beat Spiders, 69-44

Richmond, Va., Jan. 8.—The Georgetown Hoyas, playing more than half the game without their ace forward, Tommy O'Keefe, trounced the Richmond Spiders here tonight, 69-44.

The Hoyas' fourth victory of the campaign as against three losses was never in doubt after the game's fourth minute, at which point the Hoyas broke a 3-3 tie and pulled comfortably ahead.

After O'Keefe had three personals called on him in the first half, Coach Elmer Ripley yanked the veteran. Playing a total of only 16 minutes, O'Keefe threw in 10 points. He needed only eight tries to plunk in his five field goals.

Georgetown's complete control of the backboard, engineered principally by Forward John Brown, decided the one-sided pattern of the game. Brown didn't neglect his offensive duties, combining three field goals and five free throws for a total of 11 points to share his team's scoring honors with Vince Leddy.

The Hoyas return to Washington, D. C., on Monday when they'll meet the University of Maryland at the National Guard Armory.

Colonials Routed, 50-38

Wake Forest, N. C., Jan. 8.—Fresh from its upset victory over Manhattan, George Washington U. was handed a stunning 50-38 defeat by Wake Forest in a Southern Conference game here tonight before 2000.

Cocaptain Dave Shapiro, widely publicized figure in the Madison Square Garden bribe attempt, played only about a minute and failed to score.

Jack Mueller and Willard Kaylor led the winners with 13 points each in the rough and tumble game that saw the Colonials take their third conference loss in six starts. Kaylor got most of his in the first half and when Johnny Moffatt stopped him in the second, Mueller took over.

Moffatt led GW with eight points; Maynard Haithcock had seven.

N. C. State Bows To Villanova, 62-59

Villanova, Pa., Jan. 8 (AP).—Unbeaten Villanova College made it eight in a row, turning back a strong North Carolina State basketball team, 62 to 59, before 4300 tonight. Tom Sabol's field goal and foul toss in the final minute halted a last-ditch spurt by the Southerners.

Kid Demotes Oosterbaan Two Ranks

Denver, Jan. 8 (AP).—Benny Oosterbaan of Michigan may rate as the Nation's No. 1 college football coach among members of his profession, but not everybody shares that opinion.

Oosterbaan was standing in the Denver Union Station when he was spied by 11-year-old Carlo Lenzi of Vallejo, Calif.

"Gee, mister," the kid exclaimed, "ain't you the one that's the third greatest football coach in the world?"

Oosterbaan said he didn't ask Carlo the names of the two better coaches.

Both Oosterbaan and Carlo were on the Union Pacific City of San Francisco, which pulled into Denver after being snowbound since Monday at Kimball, Nebr.

Siena Defeats Eagles, 45-42

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 8.—Siena rallied from a four-point deficit in the last four minutes to overpower taller American University, 45 to 42, tonight, before a standing room audience of 5300.

The victory was Siena's eleventh in 13 games and their sixth in a row. The loss was the third for American in 10 games.

American led, 25-21 at half time, but Siena shifted tactics from a zone defense T a pressing man for man and this seemed to play havoc with the Eagle attack.

Bob Lamon, American U. set shot artist, who registered four field goals in the first half, was held scoreless in the last two periods.

Chuck Northup, Siena's 6-foot 5-inch center, who sparked the late rally with four important baskets, led the scorers with 13. Big Ed Moffatt scored 11 for American.

Griff Arrives In Florida With Overcoat

Orlando, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP).—Clark Griffith, 79-year-old boss of the Washington Senators, stepped off the train here yesterday wearing an overcoat.

That meant all was well with baseball's "Old Fox." His usual umbrella was missing.

That was all right, too. Because it meant he and Mrs. Griffith had arrived into the best January weather to greet them in their 11 annual visits. When it's windy and the weather is bad, he dons a second and heavier overcoat and carries an umbrella.

What's he going to do?

He's got man-sized work planned. First, he's going to take enough walks around Lake Eola to get his legs in shape for some golfing. Then he's going to set up the Nats spring headquarters here and get on with the business of getting his ball players signed.

NCAA May Cut Down On Bowls

San Francisco, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—Alarmed at the growing number of bowl games, the NCAA today told its 243 member schools to make no commitments for post-season football engagements after January 1950.

At the concluding sessions of the annual National Collegiate Athletic Association convention, the group heard a stinging committee report which charged that many of the bowls now in operation were spending as high as 20 to 30 per cent of their receipts on promotion, publicity and public relations; and that some bowls pay as low as 40 per cent of the gross receipts to the competing schools.

50 Bowls Queried

The report, turned in by the "bowl problem" committee chairman, Commissioner Victor O. Schmidt of the Pacific Coast Conference, said that it had sent queries to 50 bowl operators, but had received replies from only 17.

Of the others, 25 failed to answer the queries, despite follow-up letters; and eight queries were returned by the Post Office Department for lack of sufficient address.

The bowls replying were the Rose, Orange, Sugar, Cotton, East-West, Sun, Junior Rose, Gator, Glass, Pear, Salad, Raisin, Tangerine, Great Lakes, Gold Dust, Alamo and Burley. The Aloahoa Bowl also reported it had answered, but Schmidt said he had not received the reply.

Schmidt's committee, which also included Commissioner Bernie Moore of the Southeast Conference and Horace Renegar of Tulane University, asked the bowl operators for a complete break-down on the disbursement of their money.

Questions Circumvented

"Some organizations circumvented a direct answer with a lump-sum report," said Schmidt "but we broke down most bowl money handling including total receipts (minus taxes) from ticket, radio, parking and program sales."

Here is how the various bowls split up their money with the competing teams:

Of the major bowls, the Cotton was tops, with 75 per cent. The Rose Bowl gave the visiting club 70 per cent; the Sugar 55 and the Orange 38.

The others: Salad, 86; Glass, 85; Pear, 82; Tangerine, 76; Gator, 70; Sun, 67; Gold Dust, 56; Raisin, 47; Burley, 40 and Junior Rose, 33.

Bright Sword Out of Money As Favorite

Tropical Park, Fla., Jan. 8 (AP).—His task simplified by the enforced withdrawal of heavily favored Marchons II, Cat Bridge suddenly regained top form today and won the $11,700 Coral Gables Handicap by three lengths.

G. R. Watkins' 7-year-old horse, ridden by Mike Corona and running as an entry with Mrs. H. K. Haggerty's Rampart, ran the mile and a sixteenth distance in 1:44 flat. He collected $8025 of the purse for his Chester, Pa., owner, who is a county sheriff. The Cat Bridge-Rampart combine went postward at $11.50 for $2.

King Midas Second

King Midas, from Bruce Livie's Bobanet Stable, was second by four lengths. Rampart earned the show, with Approval and Bright Sword following heads behind. Bright Sword, twice second to Marchons II, was a bitter disappointment to favorite backers in the sun-baked throng of 12,699.

Fed Hammer's Marchons II, the South American with five victories to his credit in as many United States appearances, fell victim to a coughing session this morning. He had been rated an even-money choice.

With the Argentine ace in his barn, Bright Sword was installed an 11-to-10 shot in the field of eight. He never became a factor.

Leaders Stop

Two very fast, but not so durable, horses—Circus Clown and Curtain Time—shot far ahead of their rivals in short order. Racing heads apart into the backstretch, they opened up eight lengths of daylight, but they only succeeded in killing each other off. Curtain Time cracked up first, then Circus Clown "came back" about halfway home.

As the field circled out of the far side, Cat Bridge bounded into command. He widened the gap in the run home. King Midas, third and then second in the running, held on gamely to be the runner-up although no match for the victor. Rampart closed some ground to squeeze into the picture.

Fordham Coach Shifts to Army

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 8 (AP).—Head football Coach Earl H. (Red) Blaik announced today that Vincent T. Lombardi, one of the famed "seven blocks of granite" of Fordham a decade ago, had been signed as an assistant coach at the U. S. Military Academy.

Lombardi, who will report to the Army Monday, was a regular guard on Fordham's powerful teams of 1934-35-36. He was assistant varsity coach to Ed Danowski at Fordham last fall.

Earlier this week, Murray Warmath, Tennessee line coach, was added to Blaik's Army staff.

Armstrong Beats Phelps; Dunbar Wins

Armstrong Tech took over first place in the Negro Interhigh Basketball League yesterday with a 47-35 victory over Phelps Vocational in the first game of a double-header at the Armory.

Cardozo scored the first 11 points of the second game, but lost to the Crimson Tide of Dunbar, 34-26. The afternoon doubleheader was played before 1121 spectators.

The Techmen had an easy time in winning their second straight game. They used three separate units, with Gene Lawrence of the starting quintet netting 11 points.

Bill Whittington tossed in three field goals as Cardozo bolted an 11-0 lead in the first five minutes of the second game. However, Kermit Banks' four field goals led a determined Dunbar counterattack, and a foul shot by Bill Coward enabled the Tide to catch up at 13-all at intermission.

Mel Jones hooked in a one-hander from the foul circle to put Dunbar ahead to stay just after the third quarter started. Jones' backboard recoveries kept the ball under Dunbar control for the rest of the contest.

Mangrum, Monti Tie at 140 Midway in Los Angeles Open

Los Angeles, Jan. 8 (AP).—Lloyd Mangrum and his protege, Eric Monti, were tied at 138 today to lead the field at the midway mark of the $15,000 annual Los Angeles Open Golf Tournament.

Mangrum, of Chicago, United States open king in 1946, blasted the par 71 Riviera Country Club course for a five-under-par 66—the finest display in the tournament—and a 36-hole score of 138.

Monti, of Santa Monica, the 30-year-old professional who has been coached in the game by Mangrum, came in with a 67 and 138.

Ben Hogan, gunning for his fourth triumph in this event and his third in succession, all but bowed out of top contention. He took 74 blows yesterday, and 72 today for a 146, eight strokes behind the leaders.

E. J. (Dutch) Harrison of Little Rock, Ark., whose 69 set the first round pace, dropped back with a 71 for 140, tied with Marty Furgol of Albuquerque, N. Mex., whose score reads 71-69 going into tomorrow's third round of 18 holes.

Sam Snead signaled a temporary threat with a par 35 on the first nine holes today, but blew the works on the way home for a 39 and a 74 to go with his first-round 71 for a total of 145. Par for the course is 35-36—71. Snead missed three short putts—one of one foot—in the last four holes.

More of a disappointment was Jimmy Demaret, the gaudy Texan, who followed his first round 70 with a 74 for 144.

Worsham Shoots Another 75 in Open

Los Angeles, Calif., Jan. 8.—Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., fired a 75 for a two-day total of 150 in the Los Angeles Open golf tournament here today. Otto Greiner of Baltimore added a 73 to his yesterday's 74 to net a 147.

Catholic Beats Towson, 55-37

Towson, Md., Jan. 8 (AP).—Catholic University handed Towson Teachers its eighth straight loss tonight, 55-37 in a Mason-Dixon Conference basketball contest.

The Washingtonians were paced by Jim Losty, who made nine baskets, most of them on long left-handed shots from the corner of the court.

Catholic had to overcome a 15-8 lead the Townson Club built up in the first quarter. By halftime though, Catholic was ahead 28-26.

Indianapolis Drubs Lions

Pittsburgh, Jan. 8.—Pittsburgh blanked the Washington Lions here tonight, 7-0, in an American Hockey League game.

A full house of 5221 fans sat in on Base Bastien's third shutout of the season as he turned back 40 drives sent his way by the visitors.

Little Lou Crowdis, on the other end of the rink, put on a superb show at times, and the one-sided verdict against him could have been cut down considerably with better help out front. During the night he stopped 54 shots, many of them more than the ordinary.

The Wasps registered twice in the first and last periods with a three-goal session sandwiched in between.

Three of the local tallies found Crowdis caught with his defensemen down, as first Eldy Kobussen beat him coming in alone, with Peanuts O'Flaherty doing the same thing later, followed by Billy Benson.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 8 (AP).—Navy's junior varsity opened its basketball season with a 58-38 victory over Wesley Junior College.

Gonzaga Takes 6th in Row, Beats St. Paul's

Gonzaga High School won its sixth straight game yesterday by swamping St. Paul's, 55-31, on the Gonzaga court. Paul McGowan, 6-ft. 2-inch forward, sparked the winner's attack and netted a high total of 20 points.

The game was the second Gonzaga had played in less than 24 hours, but the only one who seemed to feel the strain was Gonzaga's flashy forward, Jimmy Larkins, who, usually good for at least 10 points, failed to hit the net.

Both teams used all of their players, Gonzaga out of confidence and St. Paul's out of desperation.

Clippers Meet Marvels Today

Sugar Cain and his cohorts on the Washington Clippers will go after their second professional basketball victory in three starts against the New England Masked Marvels this afternoon at Turner's Arena.

The Clippers may be strengthened considerably by game time with the addition of Len Ford, a former University of Michigan star. Negotiations with Ford, who played football last year with the Los Angeles Dons in the All-America Conference, were still going on last night.

Gochenour Holds U. S. Duckpin Lead

Karl Gochenour of Washington, finishing his 15-game set early, took the lead for the Men's United States Open Duckpin title late last night with a score of 1995.

Gochenour, however, still had formidable opposition to contend with as Bob Fisher of Baltimore, Leo Kessler of Roanoke and Lee Seim of Baltimore, all of whom still had five games to bowl. The trio had been in the lead after the entire field had finished 10 games and were still considered favorites.

Warren Lowry of Atlanta, posted the high individual game, tallying 195, after one-third of the field had completed play.

AAU Also Bars Herb in K of C Meet

Newark, N. J., Jan. 8 (AP).—Herb McKenley, world's record holder at 400 meters, today faced suspension by the AAU for failing to live up to a promise to race in Australia.

Dick Hudson, secretary of the New Jersey AAU, said he has a letter from National Secretary Dan Ferris requesting the New Jersey section to suspend McKenley, pending "a satisfactory explanation" of his action.

McKenley, a native of Jamaica, BWI, competes under the colors of the Long Branch (N. J.) Athletic Club.

Hudson said the suspension of McKenley would be carried out Monday which, he explained, is the earliest date he can call the registration committee into session. Meanwhile, however, McKenley has been barred from competing in the Knights of Columbus track meet scheduled for Brooklyn tonight.

In the letter, Ferris said in part: "McKenley accepted an invitation on behalf of the Australian AAU to compete in Australia on January 15-16. One of the conditions was that he arrive in Australia before January 8. A reservation was made for him to fly from San Francisco along with Lloyd La Beach on January 2.

"McKenley agreed to all conditions . . . At the same time he filed his entry for the Brooklyn Council Knights of Columbus meet. A dispatch has come through from Washington that he is entered to run in a meet there on January 15.

"Will you please submit this matter to your registration committee and suspend him pending an explanation of his failure to fulfill his obligation to the Australian AAU? I have checked and found that it would be impossible for him to reach Australia by plane before January 14 and the first competition is scheduled for the 15th.

"He would be without much sleep for four days and therefore in no condition to run. Under such circumstances I doubt if they would be interested in going to the heavy expenses of bringing him there."

Ferris added that McKenley had told him he would leave for Australia immediately after tonight's meet.

Hoya Icemen Play Tonight

St. Nicholas A. C., the country's oldest hockey club, helps Georgetown inaugurate its second home season 8:30 tonight on Uline Arena's rink.

This year the Hoyas are playing without two of their four famed Cassidy brothers. With the club when it lost its opener to Williams, 6-0, were Jerry and Tommy. Pat and John have graduated.

Localite George Hamilton is the goaltender for Georgetown and his performance against Williams was far better than the score indicates. Hamilton, lone non-New Englander playing for the Hoyas, made 52 saves.

Coach Bob Panoff hopes his defensemen will make things a little easier for Hamilton tonight. One of them is Connie O'Doherty rugged blocking back on the football team.

S. Kip Farrington, 44-year-old millionaire president of the New Yorkers, tends the net for St Nicholas. Included in its lineup are four members of the Olympic hockey team.

Skin Courtmen Play All-Stars

Eight Washington Redskins wintering locally will join forces tonight in a basketball game against the National Guard All-Stars at the Armory. The game, part of a triple-header will start at 8 o'clock.

The Skins' roster: Hugh Taylor, Steve Bagarus, John Adams, Joe Tereshinski, Al Demao, Tommy Mont, Jim Youel and Jim Castiglia.

Cardaci on All-America 2d Team

St. John's Guard Wins Oklahoma Trip

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

Joe Cardaci, who switched from halfback to guard two years ago, became a young man of distinction yesterday.

The Wigwam Wisemen's Club of Oklahoma City yesterday named the 16-year-old St. John's High senior to its All-America high school second team.

With the selection, Cardaci earns an August trip to Oklahoma City to play for the East against the West in the second annual high school football game. Joe was nominated by The Washington Post, which has selected him on its All-Metropolitan team for two straight years.

Cardaci was a halfback during his freshman year at Haverstraw, N. Y., High and his sophomore season at St. John's. But in 1947, St. John's fledgling coach, Joe Gallagher, moved the fleet-footed lad to the guard spot, and Cardaci, with seniors Jack George and Tom Fannon led the Cadets to their first undefeated season.

Last season, Joe was named

Joe Cardaci

cocaptain of the team, and called signals on defense. He was the big reason why St. John's was able to tie Central, the public high champion.

Despite his 203 pounds, Joe was the fastest man on the squad. He was a sprinter on the track team. Three times, the Cadets pulled him out of the line to carry the ball, and once, he reeled off a 35-yard gain.

Cardaci handled his team's place-kicking chores, and played all 48 minutes in five out of nine games. A hard-charger, the 6-footer blocked three enemy punts, and recovered the amazing number of 11 opposing fumbles.

Duke, Georgetown and Penn State are hot on his trail. The school which gets him will find him a valuable addition to its basketball and baseball teams, too. He hit .330 while catching for St. John's last season.

Like many another athlete, he's interested in becoming a coach some day. He'll pick the school which will offer him the best course in physical education.

His nomination gives two Virginia places on the All-America squad. Hodey White, 200-pound tackle from Maury High of Norfolk, was selected on the third team.

Post Placed Him On all-Metro Twice

Nats' School Registers 170

Winter Garden, Fla., Jan. 8.—The Washington-Chattanooga baseball school will open here Monday with some 170 youngsters registered in from Alaska to Puerto Rico for the 30 days training and instructions.

The camp is under the direct supervision of Joe Engel, president of the Chattanooga club, No. 1 farm team of the Senators. Zinn Beck, general manager of the Lookouts, is in charge of mechanical details.

Actual field work will be under the direction of George Myatt, who returns as manager of the Chattanooga club this year. Myatt will be assisted by Major Leaguers Sid Hudson, Walt Masterson, Joe Haynes and "Handsome" Fitzgerald.

Lookout Trainer Sandy Sandlin will look after the health of the boys, and the dining room and kitchen will be run by Miss Ruby Williams, who handles concessions at Engel Stadium. Miss Williams formerly was dietitian for a big prep school in the East.

Justice Gets Camp Award

performance of his duty." Conzelman said of Van Buren, who scored the only touchdown of the game.

Supreme Court Justice Douglas provided many a laugh by recalling his football playing days at Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash.

A Player for a Team

"We had a squad of 13 players," Douglas said, "and in our game with the University of Washington we substituted a player every time they substituted a team."

Other speakers included Jennings Randolph, former Congressman from West Virginia; Gen. Clifton Cates, commandant of the Marine Corps who presented Fischer his award; Secretary of Interior Julius Krug, who presented the trophy to Justice; J. O'Connor Roberts, past commander of the D. C. American Legion, who presented Andy Davis with the Robert Smith Trophy for being selected the District's outstanding college player; Gen. Hoyt Vandenberg of the Air Force, who presented Representative Jerry Ford of Michigan with the award for Benny Oosterbaan, named the year's outstanding college coach. Oosterbaan was snowbound and unable to attend.

Sports Announcer Harry Wismer kept the show rolling in smooth fashion and also took time out "on the field of play" to be acclaimed as the year's top announcer. For this he also received a trophy.

In addition to Justice Douglas, the Supreme Court was represented by Chief Justice Fred Vinson and Justice Stanley Reed.

Cabinet members on hand included Attorney General Tom Clark, who presented Gonzaga's Haley with his trophy; Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson, Treasurer Secretary John B. Snyder, Secretary of the Interior Julius Krug and Navy Secretary John L. Sullivan.

John R. Steelman, President Truman's special assistant, was also at the head table as were Robert Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank; Admiral James Holloway, superintendent of the Naval Academy; Maj. Robert Barrett, superintendent of Metropolitan Police; District of Columbia Commissioner Guy Mason; George P. Marshall, president of the Washington Redskins; Art Rooney, president of the Pittsburgh Steelers; Jake Embree, president of the Baltimore Colts, and Bill Dudley of the Detroit Lions and Charles O'Rourke of the Baltimore Colts.

Entertainment was provided by Morgan Baer's band and the glee club of the New York Fire Department.

Navy Beaten At Princeton

Princeton, N. J., Jan. 8 (AP).—Princeton's basketball team remained undefeated on its home court by pinning a 52-44 licking on Navy before a capacity crowd of 3200 in Dillon Gym tonight.

Fighting a neck-and-neck battle with the Midshipmen through most of the first half, Princeton jumped ahead, 25-19, just before halftime and clinched the victory with a scoring splurge in the middle of the second half.

Center Bernie Adams led the Tigar attack with 15 points in a game marked by frequent fouls. Dave Mullaney scored 15 for Navy.

Chicago Scene:

Pro Grid Leagues May Meet Again

By Harold Claassen

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—A second meeting of pro football club owners to settle their cold cash war is a distinct probability for Chicago on or about January 20.

The 3-year-old all-America Conference announced today that its annual business meeting would be held in Chicago, starting on January 18. Previously the meeting had been scheduled for New York on February 5.

National Football League owners picked January 20 and Chicago as the date and site of their annual meeting some time ago.

Owners of the two circuits had their first get-together at Philadelphia just before Christmas.

Five delegates from the all-Americas conferred with the National Leaguers than in the first public move to end the financial struggle that has cost owners in each circuit at least a million.

Little was accomplished at Philadelphia but the official announcement added that the way had been cleared for future meetings.

If the two leagues agree to an armistice, it might take the form of a common draft. In that case only one club would bid for a player's service. Or it might take the form of a common, maximum draft price.

losers, who now have dropped 21 of 29 starts. Ralph Hamilton supported him with 16 and John Mandic had 14. Big Charlie Black also scored 14 for the cellar-dwelling Western Division club, but could have led if he hadn't missed eight foul tries.

Nichols, who promises to develop into one of the topnotch players in the BAA, finished up with 12 points to tie 6-foot-8 Kleggie Hermsen. Norlander had 10 and Schulz 9.

Lanky Bones McKinney, second high scorer for the team, came within four minutes of being shut out. McKinney avoided the ignominy by finally tapping one in and added a foul in the last 60 seconds.

Andy Kostecka, Georgetown's headache boy last year who just weathered a two-week suspension by Indianapolis, wasn't with the club. Waivers have been asked on the temperamental Russian and he's expected to wind up with Providence, last-place club in the Eastern Division.

All Hail the Man From Missouri!

From North, South and Overseas Come Visitors for Jamborees

By Marie McNair

THIS TIME next week planes dropping down from the skies will be loaded with holiday visitors. Trains will chug into Union Station with cargoes of celebrities in jubilee mood. The town will begin a week-long jamboree in honor of the man from Missouri—the thirty-third President of the United States.

FLYING IN from Belgium will be Vice President Alben Barkley's son-in-law and daughter, Douglas MacArthur 2d, and Laura Louise—whose friends call her Wahwee—with their young daughter, Laura, better known as Mimi. The MacArthurs will stay with Mr. Barkley's other son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Max Truitt on Wyoming ave. Also a guest at the Truitt house will be Eldon Crowell of Middletown, Conn.

Secretary of the Treasury John W. Snyder's family of three will be increased to 13 when all the visitors arrive. In the group will be his mother, Mrs. J. A. Snyder of St. Louis, and his brothers and their wives.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter A. Dean of Madison, Wis., will be here to visit their son-in-law and daughter, the Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Julius Krug, and members of Mr. Krug's family arriving for the festivities, include his father, J. J. Krug, and his brother-in-law and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Schiel, all of Madison.

COMING UP from Dallas, Tex., will be Mrs. Delaney Walker, who'll be the guest of the Attorney General and Mrs. Tom Clark—she's Mrs. Clark's sister—and also from Dallas, Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Clark—he's the Attorney General's brother. The Postmaster General and Mrs. Jesse Donaldson are expecting Mrs. Donaldson's sister, Mrs. George Snyder of Dallas, and in Presidential Counsel and Mrs. Clark Clifford's family group will be her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Willis G. C. Kimball of Boston, and Mr. Clifford's mother, Mrs. Frank A. Clifford of St. Louis.

THREE SPECIAL TRAINS from Oklahoma will be in the Capital Cavalcade with the Governor, Roy Turner, president of the Truman-Barkley Club, aboard, and also Stephen Bryant—one—if not the only one—of the Democratic bankers in the State.

EMIL SCHRAM, president of the New York Stock Exchange, and Mrs. Schram, have a suite reserved for them at the Shoreham; Warren Lee Pierson, former president of the Export-Import Bank, and Mrs. Pierson, will be back for the high-jinks and will give a dinner at the F Street Club on the twenty-first.

Mrs. Royall Lauds Women in Europe

THE American women in Berlin—in fact, those in all the European countries that she visited, says Mrs. Kenneth Royall, can stand up and take a bow.

The wife of the Secretary of the Army who flew along with her husband on his recent inspection trip of troops abroad, had opportunity to see American women's work there. And she's both proud and pleased of their record.

CHRISTMAS DAY in Berlin she watched Mrs. Lucius Clay, wife of our Military Governor, play Santa Clause to the needy, the sick and the war orphans, whose little bodies are wasting away with tuberculosis of the bone.

Mrs. Royall had gathered up as many supplies as she could on short notice when she learned she was to be allowed to go, and distributed clothing, soap, sweets and vitamins to 40 children, half that many aged women and a small number of men in a hospital designated as her own for Christmas Day.

IN ATHENS she stayed with Mrs. Henry F. Grady—our Lucretia—wife of the United States Ambassador, heard on all sides what a magnificent job Mrs. Grady is doing in organizing women to be of service in obtaining and packaging gifts for the troops at the front.

Back in Washington on Tuesday the Secretary and Mrs. Royall were off the next day for Raleigh for the inauguration of North Carolina's Governor Kerr Scott. Mrs. Max Gardner whose late husband was once Governor of the State, was there for the ceremony and is now back at the Mayflower for inaugural festivities here.

Farewells to General McAuliffe

FAREWELL parties are starting up for Gen. Anthony McAuliffe whose one-word answer—"nuts"—to the Nazis turned the tide of the battle of Bastogne.

Pretty golden-haired Helen McAuliffe is sharing honors with her husband for she's going with him to Tokyo. The general, already committed to make two addresses—one in West Point on January 18, the other on February 4 in Boston—is planning to leave here on February 6. He and Mrs. McAuliffe have a month's holiday ahead, motoring to the West Coast with stops for visits to friends in New Orleans, San Antonio, San Diego and finally San Francisco. They'll sail from there on March 4.

Mrs. Robert E. Lee 3d, has invitations out for a cocktail party on February 2 in honor of the McAuliffes, and other party dates are a dinner by Col. and Mrs. Bertram Holtzworth, a supper party at which Col. and Mrs. John H. Hinds will be hosts.

Now She's Back In—

The Connecticut Lady Showed Her Opponents How to Be Up, When Out

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

THERE are far too few women in Congress and so it's doubly nice to have Connecticut's Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse back again. A member of the Seventy-ninth Congress, Mrs. Woodhouse was a victim of the 1946 Republican tidal-wave. During the intervening years, the former professor of economics at Smith and Connecticut College kept her political fences well under repair and has felt the pulse of a great slice of world. In October, 1947, Mrs. Woodhouse and her daughter, Margaret, set out cross-country barnstorming for the Democratic National Committee. In a three-month motor swing-around they reached the West Coast, dipped down through Texas and Oklahoma, visiting most of the Middle Western States which, in this past election, were all out for Mr. Truman.

MRS. THAYER

LAST APRIL, on invitation of the Department of the Army and under the auspices of OMGUS, Mrs. Woodhouse was sent to Germany. Her absorbing job was to make a survey on how to work with the German women, help them with their organization. Representative Woodhouse was particularly suited for the work since as a young girl she had studied economics at the University of Berlin. Though the university has been flattened, going back to Berlin was like going home. She spent May in Berlin, flew the airlift in early July, traveled through both British and American zones (never stepped across into Soviet-controlled territory), stayed a week in the Ruhr. She sought out German women leaders in every nook and cranny. She went to innumerable textile and ceramic factories where, after 15 years of Nazi relegation to babies, servant and farm work, women are just beginning to take hand in all-important production.

THERE ARE 7,500,000 extra women today in Germany. Most of them will never marry and so to launch them in useful lives is not only important to them but vital to Germany's future. They are our hope, Mrs. Woodhouse feels. Unlike men under the Nazi regime, they have no face to save, and at least a nucleus genuinely want to revamp their country. They've seen communism at first hand, want nothing of it. And their appreciation of the American and British airlift has boosted democracy sky-high in their opinion. German women must learn, and learn quickly, to take civic responsibility and their mushrooming, nonpolitical, nonreligious organizations are an immense help.

Called Home for Tough Campaign

IN LATE JULY the labor group in Mrs. Woodhouse's district cabled her to come home immediately, get set for a campaign. Though loath to leave Germany, she flew back in August not only to campaign for herself but for her friend, former OPA Director Chester Bowles, who was running for Governor of Connecticut.

UNTIL AFTER ELECTION Mrs. Woodhouse never left her district. Her district, with New London its largest city, includes 4 out of 8 counties, 64 of Connecticut's 169 towns and covers half the State. She made a speech in every single town, talked on the radio daily (and wrote each speech, too), followed up with discussion sessions open to everyone. Criss-crossing to speaking appointments and back to her 420-acre farm near Willimantic, Mrs. Woodhouse estimates she drove close to 8000 miles between August 10 and November 2! Ninety-one per cent of her campaign funds were raised by labor committees, and a wonderful group of labor-committeewomen printed, addressed and mailed over 60,000 pieces of campaign literature at no cost to their candidate.

BEING NOTED as a liberal and being so heartily sponsored by labor and farmer committes had a sole disadvantage. Progressives in her district wanted to sponsor her, too. Mrs. Woodhouse, refused, reporting they would poll 200 votes at most and their sponsorship would lose her at least 20,000. One day, quite without her knowledge, Henry Wallace broadcast a statement indorsing Mrs. Woodhouse, asking his cohorts to work for her election. This was tantamount to a

Peggy's on Her Way

Oh! to Be in Gotham At the Spring Wear Fair

By Peggy Preston

HARDLY SEEMS the right season for it, but we're off to New York this afternoon to take a look at 1949's spring and summer fashions.

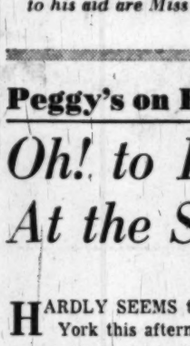
Every year at this time the New York Dress Institute invites the Nation's fashion press to view the new collections; the coats, suits, and dresses which will be back in the hometown shops by the time we begin our Easter shopping.

So, for 10 days we make the rounds of the designer's showrooms, feasting our eyes on sheer voiles, linens, chiffons and laces. Clad, the while, in our own miserable old fur coat and galoshes. The latter are indispensable, since that insufferable New York weatherman always lives up to his reputation and marks our stay with one of his shivering snowstorms.

But what those tall, willowy models are wearing reassures us. June is just around the corner, and it is not one minute too soon to be looking into the matter of what to wear.

There will be about 150 fashion reporters on hand for the previews. Opening tomorrow morning, the showings will continue through Monday night, January 17. Final event is Nettie Rosenstein's always spectacular affair at Sherry's on Park ave.

MORE AND MORE designers and firms crowd into the act each season. Carnegie, Ben Reig, Rosenstein, Pauline Trigere, Adele Simpson, Philip Mangone, Anthony Blotta, all display their wares along with dozens of lesser lights.



MISS PRESTON

But promising to steal a bit of the limelight from native designers this year are two Frenchmen, Christian Dior and Jacques Fath. Both are listed on the Institute's program for the first time.

Dior's show is scheduled for Friday, January 14, at 750 Fifth ave. The influential Paris fashion authority opened a wholesale house in New York last fall, and is now selling directly to stores all over the country.

News in his collection is that these are clothes that are not custom made, in the Paris tradition, but actual "ready-to-wear," a la America.

Jacques Fath, less spectacular than Dior, but with a high standing in the fashion world, will combine his show with that of Joseph Halpert. It will take place on the St. Regis Roof at 5 p. m., Tuesday, January 11.

INCIDENTAL to the regular dress and suit shows are those featuring other types of attire. These are sandwiched in between the Institute-sponsored showings.

These shows are concerned with practically every wardrobe item a girl can dream of. Everything has an inning including hats, shoes, jewelry, lingerie, furs, blouses, scarfs, belts, stockings and handbags. And, of course, we can't neglect those shows that picture the latest vogues in perfumes, hair styles and makeup.

We'll be sending back daily reports from Manhattan, the first to appear Tuesday morning. There will be pictures, too. So, if you want to see and read about what will be what in the Easter Parade, then just look right this way, ladies and gents!

Brewsters Honor Gannetts at Luncheon

Only Fuel Problem in France Is Which Two Weeks to Burn It

By Elizabeth Maguire

WASHINGTON is a terminal milling with travelers, each with a briefcase brimming with news. Papers are bought, headlines are scanned, and news is confirmed by people who make it. Sidelines on headlines add color and interest.

A traveler with a sunburn left over from southern France at Antibes is Mrs. Willard Thorp, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State. She accompanied her husband to the U. N. Conference in Paris, and the two returned shortly before Christmas.

Despite accounts that food and fuel are no longer a problem in France, Mrs. Thorp said she did not have a glass of milk from the day she sailed from America till the day she returned. Dinner parties at homes of friends were chilly affairs where guests could see their breaths. One hostess told her she was trying to determine in which two weeks to use a winter's supply of coal.

On a tour through Italy, Mrs. Thorp was aware that everyone from 5 to 85 was working.

As Americans approached, she said little tots jumped up and down with the happy cry "Americano, Americano." Like everyone who has visited recently in Italy, Mrs. Thorp was impressed with the spirit of the people.

ANOTHER TRAVELER here is Miss Prabhasri Siriworasarn, youthful editor of the Nakorn Sarn Daily in Bangkok, Siam. People who say it's hard to know what to believe would have a terrible time in Siam, as, according to Miss Siriworasarn, there are 30 major daily newspapers in Bangkok. Everyone who wants a part in politics has a newspaper in which to present his views. Increasing circulation cuts advertising rates and papers are borrowed more often than bought.

Miss Siriworasarn is here gathering material for a book she will write on American life. Tomorrow a tea in her honor will be given by the American Newspaper Women's Club.

Gen. Sir William Morgan, G. C. B., D. S. O., M. C., chairman of the British Joint Services Mission, was raised from K. C. B. to Knight Grand Cross of the Bath in Britain's New Year's honors list. He has been in Washington as the chief of the Imperial Staff's personal representative since April, 1947. General Morgan and his attractive daughter, Miss Pauline Morgan, live in McLean, Va.

Mrs. Roosevelt to Talk on U. N.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT, American delegate to the United Nations, will discuss the famous "Declaration of Human Rights" when she appears as guest of honor and speaker at the Women's National Press Club luncheon, Thursday, January 13, 12:30 p. m. in the Statler Hotel.

The former First Lady is given the major credit for guiding the "Human Rights Declaration" through the recent United States Assembly in Paris.

Mrs. Roosevelt, a regular member of the club, gave her first public report on the work of the 1947 session of the United Nations before club members here.

Among the distinguished guests at the luncheon will be Lady Franks, wife of the British Ambassador.

Her fiance, the son of the late Mr. and Mrs. George Coryell of Lincoln, Nebr., attended the University of Nebraska. He enlisted as a private in the armed forces prior to World War II and retired with the rank of major in the Army Air Force after five years' service in the European theater.

Miss Helen Becker To Be May Bride

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Becker of Washington announced the engagement of their daughter, Helen, to Herbert M. Decker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Decker of Jamaica, Long Island. The wedding is planned for May.

Miss Becker graduated from Western Maryland College. Her fiance, a graduate of New York University, received his master of science degree from the University of North Carolina. During the war he served as a lieutenant in the Army.

The Irish and the Arabians both hint it's in the cards for them to become embassies in the not too far future. Meanwhile, there was no celebration at the Saudi-Arabian Legation yesterday, on the anniversary of King Ibn Saud's accession to the throne. It is the second year that conditions in the Arab world have canceled celebration of their most important holiday of the year.

The Second Secretary of the Netherlands Embassy and Mrs. Schiff announced the birth of a daughter, Suzanna Henriette, on January 3. They also have an apple-cheeked, tow-headed son, age 2.

Robert Joyce, former Consul General of the United States at Trieste, has joined the policy planning staff of the State Department.

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Tanner, parents of Lady Franks, chatelaine of the British Embassy, will be in Washington until the middle of the month.

Members of the British Embassy staff mentioned on the New Year's honor list were the Minister, F. R. Hoyar Millar, who was made a Knight Companion of the Most Honorable Order of St. Michael and St. George (K.C.M.G.); W. P. N. Edwards, Counselor, who was made a Commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (C.B.E.); and J. F. Ford, First Secretary, who was appointed an Officer of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire (O.B.E.). By virtue of his decoration, the Minister may be addressed as Sir Hoyar Millar, and his wife, Lady Hoyar Millar.

It Takes a Heap o' Lookin' To Find a House or Home

By Genevieve Reynolds

DREAMS of gratis advice are being offered to the 46 uninitiated housewives of the Eighty-first Congress. They're being told how many visiting cards to leave at the White House and the embassies, where to open a charge account or be photographed. But what the majority would like to know is: Where to get a house or an apartment. In addition to the housing problem are two other headaches—how to cure the sniffles and mend bones quickly. For the majority of the lawmakers and their wives were welcomed to Washington by the cold bug.

Not only the newcomers but vetrans such as Senator Walter George of Georgia are battling vigorously with feverish colds.

Texas' dynamic new Representative Lloyd M. Bentsen took his oath of office last week in a cast. The broken back, which he inherited from an accident while touring in Mexico, caused him many embarrassing moments in the campaign. When he passed constituents, the plaster cast prevented his turning his head to speak. Upon returning home or to his office, he immediately telephoned to explain the non-greeting.

Representative Carroll D. Kearns of Pennsylvania is another bone sufferer. He broke three in his foot but gets around on crutches.

SPEAKING of advice, Mrs. George often cautions her husband on the length of his speeches. "Well, it takes 20 minutes for a speaker to get warmed up," rejoins the Senator.

"It takes only 15 minutes for an audience to get cold," Mrs. George insists.

MRS. KARL MUNDT, wife of the South Dakota Senator who stepped up from the House in November, keeps a unique scrapbook. She saves all the derogatory comments published about Congress and congressional wives.

Just turned author, she wrote in a magazine article, "society editors and columnists are the devil's advocates, put on earth to keep members of Congress from becoming arrogant." Her article, entitled, "Pity the Congressmen's Wives" contends that as a group they are slighted by society, ignored by merchants and made to feel downright dowdy. Her contribution was made to give the newcomers a realistic idea of the treatment afforded lawmakers' wives here.

ORIGINAL Roberta Regan, wife of the Texas Representative, became little weary of the real estate dilemna last week. Finally, she called the agents of her spacious home in Chevy Chase and declared, "If you don't repair this falling roof, I am going to telephone President Truman for space in the White House. The Executive Mansion is in better condition than this house."

A FORMER Conover model is the runner up if not actual possessor of the title of "most glamorous" Eighty-first Congressional wife. Five-feet-eight, slender and graceful, the fair-complexioned brunette has smiled at you from many a slick magazine cover in the past. The Texas beauty, who is a chic dresser, is none other than Mrs. Lloyd Bentsen.

Two other willowy, brown-eyed, black-haired good-lookers are in the running. They are Mrs. Clinton D. McKinnon of California and Mrs. Robert L. Coffey of Pennsylvania.

ODDS ARE 10 to 1 that President Truman will drop in at today's Congressional Club reception honoring the new members of Congress. The First Family in toto has been invited, as have members of the Cabinet and Supreme Court.

Inaugural Ball Committee Plans Gay Decorations

Advance word on the 1949 Inaugural Ball indicates that it will be the largest and most glittering event of its kind in this century.

The ball, gayest event on January 20th's calendar of Inaugural activities, will be held in the completely renovated drill hall of the two million dollar National Guard Armory, with three name bands taking turns entertaining the guests.

The Guy Lombardo and Benny Goodman bands have already been arranged for, and it is expected that the Xavier Cugat band will complete the trio.

The Armory will be lavishly draped in royal blue fabric with gold fringe here and there. The inaugural inscription will be spelled out in jeweled letters 4 feet high and the 48 State seals and flags will be prominently displayed. A number of small American flags and one giant Star-Spangled Banner will be used.

But most prominent flag of the night will be the President's flag, identifying the box where President Truman, Mrs. Truman and Margaret will sit. There will be 116 opera-style boxes, each will accommodate eight people. The dance floor itself has 30,000 square feet of dance space.

Responsible for arranging the many details of the ball are approximately 135 people who have voluntarily given their services. All major planning is being done by three cochairmen: Mrs. George Mesta, Edgar Morris and Wilson W. Wyatt.

Working with them are a number of committee chairmen, including Mrs. Dwight Davis, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Whitney, Mrs. Edward H. Foley, Mrs. John Nicholas Brown and Mrs. B. Harrison Lingo.

Members of the various committees include a number of prominent Government names. Mrs. Kenneth C. Royall, Mrs. Leslie Biffle, Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Mrs. Emma Guffey Miller, Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mrs. Tom Connally and Mrs. Max O'Rell Truitt.

The younger crowd is well represented on the committees, with the Misses Jane Lingo, Drucie Snyder and Betty Tyson among those working hard on Mrs. George Earle Stewart's program committee.

Even the after-the-ball details have been planned. A loud speaker system will be installed to call for the cars as the guests leave. (The parking lot accommodates 1400 cars.) Taxis will be lined up waiting, and a canopy running from the sidewalk to the three entrances will be erected to protect guests from the weather.

Eisenhowers' Timely Visit Banishes Seasonal Doldrums

By Norma Lanum

It took one of those periodic visits from Gen. and Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower to save the Capital's service set from the post-holiday social doldrums.

The former Army Chief of Staff and Mrs. Eisenhower were here at the Statler Hotel from Wednesday until yesterday and the parties in their honor made headline society news in what might have been this season's slackest week for the military families.

Wednesday night it was mah-jong and bridge for the Eisenhowers. Several of their long-time Washington friends met with them at the Fort McNair quarters of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Alfred Gruenther.

Miss Emily Cocke Arnold has completed plans for her wedding on February 26 to Parkman Halsey Clancy and now the pretty service junior can turn her mind to fittings with the dressmaker, sending out invitations and parties.

The post-deb daughter of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. William Howard Arnold of Fort McNair will become a bride in the chapel at Fort Myer. The Rev. Clarence R. Ford, professor of education at St. Bonaventure College and an old friend of the Arnolds, will perform the ceremony at 8 p. m.

Miss Betty Welsh Arnold, who will be married in April, will be her sister's maid of honor, and Mrs. John C. Theys, Mr. Clancy's sister, will be matron of honor. Miss Arnold has chosen for her bridesmaids Misses Elizabeth Standish Darst and Doris Wilhemena Dahlen of St. Louis, Mo., Miss Jane Westerfield Adams of Houston, Tex., and Misses Virginia Timberman, Monica Blodgett Gaillard and Joan Nicholl of Washington.

Charles Henry Watts will be the best man and the ushers will include Wiliam Howard Arnold, jr., the bride-elect's brother who is studying at Cornell, Hugh W. Markey of Staten Island, and Barry Freer, William Quigley Keenan, Victory W. Storey, Frank H. Oram, jr., and Lieut. James Howard Dallman, Betty Arnold's fiance, all of this city.

Mr. Clancy, the son of Mrs. Helen J. Clancy of Asheville, N. C., and Washington, is assistant to the chief of the Italian Ship Owners Commission. And he is also studying for his doctorate in international law at Georgetown University. His bride-to-be attends Peabody Conservatory of Music, Baltimore, Md.

Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Frank Mears will entertain at a dinner dance for the Arnold daughters and their fiances on January 29, at the Army-Navy Country Club. And other parties to honor the engaged couples include Mr. and Mrs. Ogle Singleton's cocktail party and Miss Joan Nicholl's shower slated for the last of this month.

Mary Haworth's Mail

After Two Years' Courtship, With Marriage Plans Made, Girl Is Stunned When Fiance Slaps Her in Anger; Should She Jilt Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl 18 and very much in love with Ralph, who is 20. We have been going together for two years and have made plans to be married this summer, but a certain aspect of his behavior worries me.

Ralph has been very wonderful to me; he has never once been indifferent or unfaithful in any way, and has given me all the love a girl could want; but the other night he did a shocking thing that I can't understand. This was a second offense, but worse than the first.

We got into an argument that was really rather trivial and rather than squabble I started to walk into the house, whereupon he grabbed me and shook me and slapped me, in an ugly way that I had never thought possible in him—or in anyone else for that matter.

Ordered Him Out But He'll Be Back

WHEN I FREED myself he ran after me and actually broke down in tears and begged forgiveness, but as this was a second offense, I was so stunned and indignant that I told him to get out, that I would never marry him. As he was leaving he told me he loved me and I am sure he does; also I know that he will be back; but what should I do?

Believe me, he has been very wonderful except for these outbursts; but he is terribly jealous of everything I do and now I am almost afraid to be his wife, although I love him very much. He loves children, has a very good job, neither drinks nor smokes and would be an excellent provider, I'm sure. But dare I risk marriage to him? Please answer soon. T. L.

Sugar-Coated Sample of What to Expect

Dear T. L.: Behavior in courtship is only a suger-coated sample of what to expect in marriage; and that's why most marriage counsellors advise lengthy association in various social situations as the best test of congeniality before taking the final step.

Educators have conducted several major studies of factors contributing to success or failure in marriage, and information gleaned from thousands of married couples indicates that marriage based on five years' courtship seldom breaks up; and that marriages based on three years' courtship also have a healthy chance of survival.

Further, the age of the contracting parties seems to make a difference, for better or for worse; and the girl who marries at 18 is running great risk of experiencing two causes of dissatisfaction somewhat later. Girls who marry around 23 constitute the majority of happy wives who feel they've chosen well.

The girl who marries at less than 20 hasn't matured sufficiently to evaluate men in terms of adult-character values, and may be more "in love" with being loved than rationally devoted to the lad she espouses as husband,—and I rather think this applies to your erstwhile blind acceptance of Ralph's (at times) "wonderful" treatment of you.

Signs of Serious Emotional Disorder

Also the girl who marries quite young, which is to say under 21, invariably, without exception, sooner or later regrets the haste with which she leaped from the pastures of youth into heavy harness; and she has moods of feeling "sick with longing" for years of youth she threw away, even though her husband may be a sterling fellow whom she loves dearly.

Now, about Ralph: his terrible jealousy and insane temper—for such it is when the control slips, obviously—give evidence of serious emotional disorder, which may have a neurotic origin or might refer to incipient paranoia, a tragic affliction in which distrust of the beloved is a characteristic symptom.

In fairness to you, who seek advice, I must warn that whatever its significance, it disqualifies him to be a good husband, no matter how ardently he cares for you. In situations where reasonable restraint is most required, he is least able to maintain it,—and to safeguard your welfare, you should heed your instinct and refuse to marry him. M. H.

Your Baby

Regard Each Child as an Individual

By Myrtle Meyer Eldred

There is an enormous temptation in any family where there are two children of approximately the same age to treat the two as if they were twins. This is especially apt to happen when the children are of the same sex and the only children of the family.

Then the one bedroom is designed for them; the clothes are the same, the bringing up is simplified for the parent by dealing with them as if they were the same age.

This is a grave mistake from the standpoint of both children. The older one suffers most grievously because he is constantly being classified as a younger child in privileges, play and companionship. There is little incentive for him to act his age, for he still has to go to bed with the smaller child and all their amusements are geared to the enjoyment of the younger.

As for this child, he, too, is at a disadvantage. He wants to equal or surpass the older brother because he is in continuous competition with him. He literally pulls himself up by his bootstraps in order to accomplish this, to the chagrin of the older child and to his own detriment in terms of tensions, jealousy and senseless rivalry.

The older child should always enjoy a superior position because of his age. He should go places and act in ways denied to the younger child who is counseled to look forward to the time when he too can have the same privileges.

They should have different bedtimes and preferably different playmates so that each may enjoy play at his own level of interest.

The older child, because of his greater capacities, should carry a larger share of the home work. Thus he becomes aware, as does the younger, that more privileges bring greater responsibilities as natural compensation.

Ask Anne

This is probably the most stupid question you've been asked to date, but I honestly don't know the answer. We're moving into a house with a double sink. Can you tell me the most efficient way of using it? Is one part for the washed dishes or do I still use the drainboard?
G. M.

One half of the sink is used for washing the dishes and the other half is used for rinsing and draining them. A very satisfactory arrangement is to buy a dish draining rack which will exactly fit into the sink and a hose with a spray attachment for the faucet. With this inexpensive equipment you can save hours of dish-drying time in a week. As the dishes are washed, place the plates, saucers, etc., on end in the drying rack, and when it is full spray rinse them with the hose. After they are rinsed and if there are no more dishes to be rinsed they can be left right there to dry or lifted up to the drainboard if you splash them with further washing in the other tub. If you use very hot water for the rinsing they will dry without a streak. With this method some people prefer to dry by hand the glassware and silver.

Your double sink can also save in vegetable preparation—when you wash greens, for instance, and want to put them through several waters.

How can I remove silver paint from a white cotton blouse? I've tried nail polish remover and turpentine with no results.
J. H.

Did you give time for the turpentine to soften the stain? To do this, apply the turpentine or carbon tetrachloride or benzine to both sides of the fabric where it is stained. Rub gently between the fingers and allow to stand an hour. Bear in mind that turpentine and benzine are inflammable. When the spot is thoroughly softened, apply more solvent and rub until the stain is removed. Wash in soap and water.

I would like to know if a crinoline slip which has lost it's stiffness can be restored?
J. H.

If the slip is cotton (crinoline usually is), it can be stiffened by dipping it in a laundry starch soluton. Use a medium strength starch, dry to just damp and press.

How can I remove the mildew which forms on my shower and window curtains, which are plastic? J. P.

It is not always possbile to completely remove mildew from shower curtains because, as the mildew fungas grows it penetrates into the plastic making any surface method of removal ineffective. However, you can probably very much improve the appearance of the curtains by laying them on a flat surface and sponging them with a cloth wrung out of vinegar to remove the soap scum and possibly some of the mildew with it. When clean, wash with mild soap and water and rinse. If this doesn't remove all of the mildew, you could try sponging with a household bleach solution. Use one fourth cup of bleach to a cup of water. Do not allow the bleach to remain on the plastic for any time and rinse thoroughly.

The blue color of waterproof paper faded onto my baby's pink plastic chair pad. Will you tell me how I can remove this blue color without injuring the color or material of the pad? D. P.

I'm sorry, I do not know of a safe and effective method for removing the dye from plastic.

After having diaper service for months, I decided to wash them myself as I have a machine and thought it would be quite simple, but I was in for a surprise indeed! With the service the diapers were always so soft and white and after looking mine over they seem to be stiff and dingy looking. I believe I've tried everything from extra rinsing, boiling, hanging them out in the sunshine or on nice windy days to ironing them, but to no avail. Is there any type of water softener or bleach that can be used on the diapers without discomfort to the baby?
J. K.

If you will add a cup of household bleach to each washer full of water you will, in three or four washings, have diapers which are white. Rinse the diapers three times after washing and wring as much water as possible from them before drying. Before you hang them, give each diaper several brisk shakes to fluff it. When you have them white again it will not be necessary to add bleach to each wash water. Every other time should be enough. Also, using bluing in the wash water or first rinse will make them appear whiter.

We have removed the linoleum from the basement wood floor and find that termites have destroyed parts of it. How can we get rid of the termites so that the floor can be patched? C. H.

Because termites do such extensive damage and their presence is not easily detectd by someone not trained to do it, I would suggest you enlist the services of a professional exterminator so that you will be sure to destroy the entire infestation.

I enjoy your column but I do not agree with you when it comes to the removal of ink. I work in an office. When we get ing spots, we use soda and peroxide, leaving it on overnight. Spread a dress skirt on a flat surface, cover the spot with a pile of bread soda, then wet with peroxide. In the morning, brush off. They say it doesn't even take color out. I have had no experience there. A neighbor took almost every bit of the ink out of a needlepoint stool with this process. Hope this will help someone. L. E. S.

Since hydrogen peroxide is a bleach (though a mild one), there is always the chance that it may affect the color of the material. We recommend using an absorbent (cornstarch, for instance), glycerine, or some other harmless measure before resorting to bleach of any kind in removing ink stains. Thank you, though, for your bleaching suggestion, which sounds practical.

All my furniture of bleached mahogany has gradually darkened through waxing, polishing, etc. Recently, we bought a light oak radio and it is several shades lighter, I would very much like to darken it a little. Can this be done without refinishing? I just want it a little less white looking.
J. B.

You can darken it by applying a wax which is darker than the piece now is. Automobile supply stores sell wax for woods which comes in the common wood colors. Using one of these waxes on the piece will darken it. Be sure to apply the wax in thin, even coats and buff each coat well after it has dried thoroughly. It may require several coats to do the job.

Can you, or perhaps some readers from the Southwest, tell me where I can obtain good Navajo rugs? I have one of black, gray and white—the natural colors—and do not want anything with the garish commercial dyes now too often used. I should also like to see the greater part of the profit go to the weaver. L. T.

Any suggestions for L. T., readers?

HERE'S a glamorous dish for a dinner party, made with a budget meat cut plus tasty "fixings" and a little time and trouble. It's a Glazed Stuffed Shoulder of Veal and the recipe follows:

Glazed Stuffed Shoulder of Veal

1 boned shoulder of veal (about 5 pounds)
12 dried apricots
½ pound sausage meat
1 pound chestnuts, boiled and peeled
5 pears, peeled and diced
¼ cup butter
Salt and pepper
¼ cup Port wine
8 or 10 strips bacon
Apricot jam

Wipe veal with damp cloth. Soak apricots in water ½ hour, drain and chop. Fry sausage meat until lightly browned. Chop chestnuts and combine with apricots and pears. Saute slowly in butter until fruits are tender, about 12 minutes. Combine with sausage meat, wine, salt, and pepper. Pack into cavity of veal. Roll and sew or tie in place. Place on rack in roasting pan and cover with strips of bacon. Roast in slow oven (300° Fahrenheit) until done; allow 40 to 45 minutes per pound. One-half hour before meat is done, spread with apricot jam. Decorate with half circles of ripe olive if desired. Bake until a golden glaze is formed. This recipe makes 10 to 12 portions.

Don't Worry!

10 Rules Help You Do More And Fret Less

Your problems have little, if anything, to do with your worrying, according to an article in Better Homes & Gardens magazine.

The habitual worrier "dreams up" things to fret and stew about and actually makes them up out of thin air.

Innermost thoughts, wishes and desires—unless powered by action and given concrete expression—become frustrated.

A real sense of security can be achieved only through the expression of inner energies. Here are some ways listed in the article to worry less and accomplish more:

1. Don't think of problems as difficulties—think of them as opportunities for action.
2. After you have done your best to deal with a situation, forget it and go on to the next thing.
3. Keep busy. Keep your day filled with work, recreation and sleep.
4. Don't concern yourself with things you can't do anything about.
5. Stop building air castles. For the time being, eliminate daydreaming completely.
6. Don't put off an unpleasant task until tomorrow. It simply gives more time for your imagination to make a mountain out of a possible molehill.
7. Don't pour out your woes and anxieties to other people. Their sympathy makes it easy for you to feel sorry for yourself.
8. Get up as soon as you wake up. If you lie in bed, you may use up as much nervous energy living your day in advance as you would in actual accomplishment of the day's work.
9. Arrange your schedule to cut down on hurrying. Hurrying helps to shatter poise and self-confidence.
10. Break up big projects into simple steps of action. Then negotiate those steps one at a time. Don't allow yourself to think about step number two until you've executed step number one.

Fred the Hairstylist, Says:

Don't jump to the conclusion that you must have a permanent wave until you have given a fair test to our "Curlee Cut," which brings out the natural beauty of your hair.

U. S. Experts Find 45 Ways to Miss Being 'Perfect 36'

A woman can miss being a "perfect 36" in at least 45 different ways, say clothing specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture in announcing a new bulletin on "Pattern Alteration."

Margaret Smith, of the Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, explains that because every figure differs at least slightly from every other, it pays to know how to alter a pattern to get a perfect fit. For success in making clothes, she advises first choosing a pattern of style and size to suit the individual figure, then making any necessary changes in the pattern rather than in the garment after it's cut and put together.

How best to make these changes she describes with illustrations in "Pattern Alteration" (Farmer's Bulletin 1968), which may be purchased for 10c in coin (not stamps) from the Government Printing Office, Washington, 25, D. C.

Perez Tells Best Way to Learn Rumba

Pedro Perez, new director of the Don Pallini dance studio in Washington, points out the fact that Latin American teachers are most naturally qualified to teach the Latin American dance steps now in vogue all over the country. This is because there is more involved in doing the rumba or samba than merely learning a step pattern.

Pedro Perez

Mr. Perez suggests that men and women who want to learn the rumba right learn the Don Pallini way — where Latin American teachers are on hand. Don Pallini studios are open from 11 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Everyone is also invited to join the gay socials every Wednesday night at 10:30 p.m., for 2½ hours of dancing and instruction. The admission is only $1.50.

Hints for Homemakers . .

For an economy meal serve a fish chowder, a salad and a hearty dessert such as gingerbread and applesauce or cottage pudding with fruit sauce.

* * * *

Hot cooked cereal may be served with a square of butter or margarine instead of the usual milk or cream.

* * * *

Grated yellow cheese is delicious on many dishes and helps add good food value to a meal. Sprinkle it over a casserole dish, on a mound of fluffy mashed potatoes or over a cream soup.

Getting Around Helps Circulation

Try to walk at least an hour each day. It improves your circulation, says Terry Hunt, noted health authority, and does wonders for sluggish systems.

Michel Coiffures as Seen in Vogue to show you his short cuts which grow from a national to an international fashion!

Michel's keen sense of the shape of hair to come . . . and Vogue's approbation . . . started the soignée, highly polished coif on its continent to continent acceptance. When Michel, mountain to Mohamet-like, brought his short wave to the Paris Openings . . . the revolution against long hair was complete . . . every smart head in Paris fell for his short cut. Miracles of simplicity, versatility, easy upkeep, these satiny coiffures crop ten years off a woman's age . . . are an integral part of the fashion silhouette. Newest is Michel's molded close, "Empire" elegant compliment to new Directoire fashions . . . which he predicts will equal the fame of his "Cap Cut", "Cabochon" and "Shell" coiffures.

Mrs. Woodhouse Came Back

political kiss of death, but, fortunately, Margaret Woodhouse caught the statement as it flashed on teletype, called her mother and before it reached the newspapers the story was scotched by their quickly contrived counterstatement.

Two weeks before election, Mrs. Woodhouse was sure of victory. She had made sure everyone registered, checked carefully, found there would be a big turnout at the polls and a big turnout always means a Democratic victory. But she merely expected to squeeze by, and was more than agreeably surprised on receiving a larger majority than in 1944 to lead the State. During the campaign she rode on the Truman train from Providence to New London, feared that there would be an embarrassingly small showing at the station. When the train arrived, an estimated crowd of 18,00 milled around Truman. Since there are only 32,000 New Londoners, Mrs. Woodhouse was convinced Truman's election was cinched.

Mrs. Woodhouse, who is slim, on the short side, has fluffy white hair, wears pince-nez glasses and is wonderfully gemutlich talked her way into politics while teaching economics. Her first political office was Secretary of State for Connecticut back in 1940. She was drafted, found it congenial and the whole political setup really a job of adult education. In the Seventy-ninth Congress she made her mark on the Banking and Currency Committee which includes her special fields—pricing and housing. Committee work included the Bretton Woods Conference and the British Loan, which were extremely valuable experience. She hopes, of course, to be appointed to the same committee. Unlike most members of Congress, Representative Woodhouse stations her top secretary in the home district. He makes the rounds, keeps her informed, takes care of constituents' requests. During the Seventy-ninth Congress she went home weekends, attended an open forum at least twice monthly. The forums were sponsored by churches and such, everyone was welcomed to have a say.

About a year ago Mrs. Woodhouse bought her farm, moved into its 200-year-old house, started developing a dairy. Her daughter, Margaret, is one of her secretaries and is equally keen on politics. On the side Representative Woodhouse owns two Georgetown houses, rents one and is a most obliging, if meticulous, landlady.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, JANUARY 9, 1949

Labor-Material Competition Seen

U. S. Housing Scheme Will Cut Volume, Home Builders Fear

By Conrad P. Harness

WASHINGTON reaction to the housing section of President Truman's "State of the Union" message ranged from high concern to cold indifference.

The President on Wednesday asked Congress to enact legislation to provide one million public housing units in the next seven years, authority to allocate material in short supply and to impose price ceilings on scarce materials.

The National Association of Home Builders, a group of over 14,000 home builders, took the stand that any large public housing program would scare many homes off the market and reduce the number to be built this year and next.

An association newsletter to members said construction of homes by the Government would be in direct competition with private industry for skilled workmen and materials. In addition, the newsletter stated, Uncle Sam would probably take away plenty of customers which builders could supply with low-cost homes.

Proposal Was 'Shocking Surprise'

FRANK CORTRIGHT, NAHB executive secretary, said the President's proposal for one million public housing units came as a "shocking surprise." He said no one in the building industry had taken seriously "the public housing lobby's request immediately following the recent election that the program of socialized housing in the United States should start with a million units."

"The home building industry will certainly express itself more vigoriously than in the past on every issue it believes to be harmful to our economy and not in the best interest of the home buying public," he added.

An NAHB official spokesman predicted that public housing would cost about 18 billion dollars over a 40-year period, providing for a Federal contribution of 445 million dollars for 40 years.

Locally, heads of the building and realty groups had nothing to say about the controversial message. Raymond M. Taylor, president of the Washington Real Estate Board said he hadn't had time to read the President's message. He said he was not aware that the President had asked Congress for legislation to provide one million low-rent houses.

Rental Volume Defended

WILLIAM BANKS, president-elect of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington, said he had nothing to say concerning the message.

Clarence W. Gosnell, outgoing president of the builders' group, disagreed with President Truman's statement that builders were producing too few rental units and too large a proportion of high-priced houses.

"More than 50 per cent of the housing units started here during 1948 were of the rental type," Gosnell declared. "There may have been too few rentals started on a national scale, but not local."

John Ihlder, head of the National Capital Housing Authority, said he was very much encouraged by the President's understanding of the need for additional housing for low income groups.

Ihlder estimated the Washington area had 40,000 to 44,000 substandard dwellings which should be removed or extensively rebuilt. He said NCHA, in each of its annual reports since 1944, had asked authority and funds to build at least 5500 new units within three years.

"We hope private enterprise will bring down its costs and rents and will be able to deal constructively with that part of the 44,000 substandard dwellings which are most easy to deal with," Ihlder added.

NCHA Vacates High Income Families

THE NCHA head said no plans had been prepared for new public housing projects here. "If we announced plans to build in a certain area," he pointed out, "land costs would rise sky high. We never announce plans until we're ready to go ahead with construction."

NCHA now has several families in public housing units with incomes over $5000. These will be asked to find private quarters, although he expressed concern over their ability to secure homes or rentals at economic prices.

In the next two months NCHA will send similar "move" notices to those families occupying Government housing whose family incomes exceed $4000. Later on, notices will be sent to remaining families with incomes over $3000.

If new public housing is to be built in the Washington area, Ihlder said he thought the one-family, two-story house was the best type. Such housing gives tenants responsibility of pride in the upkeep of their quarters, he declared.

There will be certain areas where multifamily houses will be more appropriate, he added. He thought any elevator-type apartment building would be too expensive for low income housing.

Realtors Fear Federal 'Shackles'

THE NATION'S organized realtors, represented by Herbert U. Nelson, executive secretary of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, are concerned with Federal "shackling" of the building industry, Nelson indicated.

"Although the President's estimate that there are five million families living in slums or firetraps sounds high, we do have slums and firetraps," he explained. "The important thing is that we have to get rid of them. Shackling the building industry and concentrating action in Washington will never do it.

"With the new materials, building methods and superior equipment that can be put into a home now, we are on the threshhold of raising the housing standards of all families. Since the end of wartime controls over house building, our home production industry has made tremendous strides and has turned in a magnificent performance. It has brought back the "for rent" sign in many communities. It has given us a good supply of new homes for sale and at good value.

"With the easing of the housing shortage that is already evident, we can concentrate more on raising our housing standards for all families. There is no reason why with continued competitive freedom the home building industry cannot meet current demand and in addition replace every home in America within 50 years."

Construction Jobs For $124,485,000 Awarded in Week

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—Engineering construction contracts awarded this week totaled $124,485,000, Engineering News-Record reported today.

This volume, the engineering construction weekly said, is 59 per cent over last week, a 3 per cent over the previous four-week average and 45 per cent over the corresponding week last year, when five days were counted.

Private construction contracts awarded totaled $45,627,000, up 44 per cent over last week and 31 per cent over the corresponding week a year ago.

Public construction rose 70 per cent over last week to $78,858,000. This was a 55 per cent gain over 1948. Federal construction contracts accounted for $34,230,000 of the total and State and municipal contracts to $44,628,000.

New Cloth Has Warp But No Woof

By Sam Dawson

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—Warp without woof, carpets with the pads blown right into their backs, bowling alleys that cry "foul" if you make one—all these and more, are here today.

Add an electric refrigerator with shelving so flexible a farmer can put a 5-gallon milk can in it without too much yak-yak from his wife.

This new milkman's special is one of the eight new Shelvadors announced today by Crosley. All will do as well in the city as country. But the huge sales in farm areas since the war to meet demands of farmers whose incomes have soared with high prices led Crosley to bring out one with special gimmicks.

The woofless wonder is a ribbon developed by Freydberg Bros. of New York. The company says its new process of laminating a rayon warp to an acetate film makes for a ribbon of greater luster.

Sponge rubber is blown into the backing of a carpet by Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Co. of New York to eliminate the need for the usual felt underlay. It is being produced now for offices, but later will be used for home carpeting.

A nonskid scatter rug brought out by the Aldon Rug Co. of New York uses a new chemical formula combined with rubber to back the rugs. The company says this keeps the rug, instead of you, flat on the floor.

A new automatic foul detector for bowling alleys is announced by the American Machine and Foundry's affiliate, AMF Pinspotters, Inc. A single-beam electric eye flares red when a bowler gets too close to the foul line and rings a bell when he fouls.

An automatic bowling alley, which the makers say can be used without strain by even wheelchair patients, is scaled down to 26 inches by 18 feet, and uses smaller than regulation balls. Is is made by the Elco division of the Electric Boat Co.

Wheaton Hills Homes

Ten 2-story brick homes are planned for early construction on Grand View, Dawson and Georgia ave., Wheaton Hills, Md., by Simon Construction Co.

'Harundale' Is Example

Huge Home Projects Lose Money, Is Claim

THE BUILDER who erects a 1000-home project by mass production methods stands to lose his shirt, while the small builder who erects 5 homes per year ordinarily will make a profit. This statement was made by John E. Byrne, sr., a man who should know what he's talking about.

The Byrne Organization, 2607 Connecticut ave. nw., of which he is chairman of the board, has built 1013 new homes at Harundale, near Glen Burnie, Md., on the Baltimore-Annapolis hwy. He says he won't make a dime on the deal. And what's more, he's through with speculative construction on a mass scale.

Of the 1013 two- and three-bedroom bungalows erected at Harundale since January, 1947, only 440 have been sold. The sales program has been shelved and homes are now up for rent, with 115 occupied at $75 for the two-bedroom house and $82.50 for three bedrooms. Over 450 are vacant.

Sale of Project Is Planned

BYRNE blamed a large overhead, nonproductivity of labor, erratic arrival of materials and large land development costs for skyrocketing price tags on his homes. Early in 1947, a three-bedroom, steel-frame, vermin-proof, fiberglass insulated, radiant heated, FHA-approved bungalow, with a nice size lot on a paved street, sold at Harundale for $6750. The same house today would cost $10,600, Byrnes declared. "Even at that price there's no profit in it for us."

He said negotiations were underway with an investment syndicate to take over the project and operate the homes on a rental basis.

Byrne's revolutionary construction methods at Harundale caused widespread interest among builders when unveiled in early 1947. Huge quonset huts housed assembly lines for home sections such as roofs, etc., which were then trucked to the housing site and put in place by cranes.

Every labor-saving device possible was utilized. Whole wall sections were prefabricated on-site and swung into place. Assembly lines employing skilled men spewed forth plumbing, heating and electrical fixtures complete and ready for erection. Through constant repetition of their daily tasks, workmen were expected to achieve a higher work rate.

Production Line Has Faults

HOUSES were produced efficiently and quickly, Byrne pointed out, but not cheaply. He feels that mass production cannot produce a low-cost house that the public will buy.

No novice in the building game, the Byrne Organization built the large River Oaks community in Houston, Oak Grove in Dallas, Alexandria Courts in Shreveport and the 3000-unit Benmorrell Park in Norfolk.

It boasts two Army-Navy "E's" for construction of the Naval Amphibious Base at Solomons Island, Md.

With several large projects underway elsewhere in the United States and bases at the time Harundale was started, Byrne felt that through mass purchasing of materials he could keep prices down and pass the savings on to the purchaser. But results show it didn't work out as planned.

One unexpected cost factor, said Byrne, was that his workmen didn't put out a dollar's work for a dollar's wage. Even bonuses didn't increase production, although he paid premium pay for Saturdays and Sundays.

Open shop at first, he switched to union labor in the later stages and gained better production, Byrne stated. He pointed out that his labor cost rose 37 per cent in 1947 as contrasted with 1946.

Materials were another stumbling block. When plans were under way for Harundale's development in 1946, Byrne felt that a steady flow of materials would be available. However, a drastic shortage of vital building items forced him to buy in huge quantities whenever possible, stockpiling the material upon arrival.

Wives Help Build New Dayton Homes

Dayton, Ohio, Jan. 8.—The wives of contractors are working shoulder to shoulder with their husbands to break the housing bottleneck in Dayton, according to the current issue of Look magazine. They are lending their talents, not only to the more feminine work of bookkeeping and interior decorating, but to man-sized contracting jobs as well.

The idea of husband-and-wife teams in the contracting business originated during the war when many husbands were away with the armed forces. The "missus," to keep the business going, donned everalls and took over the management, and now it seems she is in partnership for keeps.

Seven wives of Dayton building contractors, all members of the Montgomery County Builders' Association, are pictured at work at their various jobs. They are Mrs. Alex Simms and Mrs. Henry N. Nauman, who act as purchasing agents: Mrs. Louis Zeiger and Mrs. Paul E. Lapp, supervisors of interior decorating; Miss Olivia Hoefler, secretary of the Builders' Association, who helps her father and brother in their construction business; and Mrs. Jack Stein and Mrs. Walter Vitzker, their husbands' secretary and bookkeeper, respectively.

No Harbor for Termites

The United States Bureau of Mines points out that because mineral wool insulation is an inorganic product made of rock, slag or glass, it offers no harbor to termites or vermin and needs no chemical treatment to resist fire.

Show Indicates

Television Affects Style Of Furniture

Chicago, Jan. 8 (U.P.).—Manufacturers at the annual Midwinter Furniture Show exhibited many pieces of furniture designed to make it easier to view the family television screen.

Many are showing chairs and sofas which will allow fans to sit tirelessly through a four-hour sport event or opera.

"I got tired of seeing my friends drag out the folding chairs and all the dining room chairs into the living room when company came," one manufacturer said.

Si Slavin, sales manager of the Sherman-Bertram Co. of California, said his ottoman would do away with mad rushing for folding chairs or hauling the heavy sofa in front of the television set.

Slavin's ottoman at the Merchandise Mart is circular. The top is upholstered and the legs are in light or dark woods. Underneath are four nested seats which can be taken out for visitors and moved within view of the screen.

"The wise television set owner will furnish his living room around his set—unless he has a special living room," said a spokesman at the American Furniture Mart.

Sales Slow, Builder Rents Maryland Homes

Rehandling of materials, inability to schedule work because of lack of vital items, and interest paid on stockpiled materials all added to zooming price tags on completed houses.

Building a complete new city poses interesting cost factors. It cost $70,000 for police and guard details at the building site. New home owners at Harundale were continually besieging the builders on repair and maintenance calls which do not plague builders who erect small groups of homes and then move on to the next site.

John Byrne, jr., president of the Byrne organization, estimated his firm had handled 1000 service calls at Harundale, with $80,000 spent on maintenance of homes occupied by buyers.

The elder Byrne told of a woman who had lived at Harundale for six months. A violent rainstorm washed away a section of her lawn and she was insistent that the builder repair the damage.

"The storm was an act of God," said Byrne, "but we were expected to make it good. If we didn't take care of such items it caused bad relations with the community."

Location No Detriment

ANOTHER item which Byrne feels hinders construction of low-cost homes is the Federal Housing Administration's insistence on extensive land development, including paved streets, curbs and gutters, and in some cases paved aprons and runways toward garages.

Although the goal at Harundale was low-cost housing, the development costs would do justice to luxury home sites, he indicated. Harundale homes had the structural details of a $50,000 residence, he added.

The Government's land development on requirements on low cost homes were said to be a stumbling block to builders anxious to erect that type of housing in answer to continued appeals from Government for homes that low income groups can afford.

Byrne said he felt Harundale's location, 15 minutes from Baltimore in Anne Arundel County, about 5 miles south of the Baltimore City limits, was not a detriment to sales. He blamed lack of sales entirely to the high sales price which had to be charged.

Byrne, jr., estimated that 10 per cent of the buyers came from Annapolis, the rest from Baltimore. He said no one from Washington had bought, although one couple living in the development worked in Washington, about an hour's drive away.

Byrne, sr., predicted that housing prices over the Nation would not come down in the foreseeable future. He gave these reasons: Once labor has established a high wage rate and level of production, it won't change; materials may come down in price but will still level off at a high cost level; Marshall Plan committments for materials will aid in keeping material prices up; if demand for materials slackens, he added, manufacturers will cut production, not prices.

In a discussion of high overhead expense in building large groups of homes, Byrne revealed this tidbit which should make future housing "giants" quake in their boots:

In a 1000-home project which he is now building under contract, not speculation, in Peoria, Ill., his firm has filled out 32,000 different documents relating to titles, mortgages, loans, etc.! . . .

Dollars Go Begging in Manila

Manila, Jan. 8 (AP).—Most countries of the world spend every dollar the United States will give them, but not the Philippines. Chairman Frank A. Waring of the U. S. Philippines war damage commission says this young republic stands to lose possibly 30 million dollars if it doesn't act before June 30 next year.

That is the amount advanced by Congress to repair war-wrecked public property in the Philippines which has yet to be acted upon by the Philippine government. The appropriation expires next year.

Waring told the Advertising Club of Manila that the government has not even completed the plans for rebuilding the University of the Philippines although funds were allotted nearly six months ago.

Shut Off Water To Avoid Frozen Pipes When Away

As most cases of frozen water pipes occur when the home is unoccupied, water should be shut off at the meter, and all pipes, toilet tank, radiators and boiler drained when the family is absent more than a day or two during the cold months.

To prevent pipes freezing on an unusually cold night, open all cold-water faucets slightly so they will drip very slowly through the night. Water in motion seldom freezes.

Thaw frozen water pipes promptly to avoid bursting. In applying heat, work from the faucet toward the meter. Keep the faucet open to know when water flow starts.

A blow-torch or other open flame should be used only if there is no possibility of igniting nearby wood construction. Safest method is to wrap the pipe with cloth and pour boiling water on it. If the frozen section of a pipe is inaccessible it can be thawed by heating it at any exposed point. Waste pipes can usually be thawed by slowly pouring down boiled water.

Repair of Marred Sinks

Marred enamel surfaces of sinks and plumbing fixtures can be repaired by coating with a new type of porcelain glaze, applied like putty and worked smooth. When dry, the finish closely matches the original surface.

UNPARALLELED ENVIRONMENT

Beverley Hills represents the last word in atmosphere. Comprising nearly 400 acres of rolling, wooded land, marked by occasional ravines and meandering brooks, this delightful, park-like area provides a perfect setting for the establishment of your home. Over the hills and through the valleys extend broad, winding boulevards. In this charming section have been installed those improvements which mean so much in your everyday life—paved streets, water mains, electric lines, sanitation provisions—all at no extra cost to home owners. For your convenience shopping centers with adequate parking facilities have been built adjacent to the development. A Community Church, non-denominational in character, for your religious and social affairs—a new elementary school within easy walking distance of your home—bus transportation to the heart of the community—are just a few of the outstanding services offered to homeowners in Beverly Hills. But that is not all. Beverly Hills is protected to the fullest extent by rigid restrictions against the encroachment of undesirable industrial or commercial development; against undesirable neighbors, unnecessary noises, smoke, dirt, disagreeable odors, traffic disturbances and other annoyances so common in many urban sections. Here is really a cloistered community where folk may live in peace and contentment and children may be reared in safety amid wholesome surroundings that enhance the cultural environment of the home.

OPEN TODAY AND DAILY, 10 TO 6

TO REACH—Cross Memorial Bridge to Shirley Highway; continue on Shirley Highway to Ridge Rd., left on Ridge Rd. to Executive Ave. (At Shopping Center), right on Executive to Glebe Rd., right 2 blocks to entrance of Beverly Hills, follow signs to Exhibit Home.

Japanese Like Farm Cooperatives

Tokyo (AP).—Japanese farmers seem to like the idea of running their own cooperatves. Occupation orders reformed the old government-controlled, compulsory co-ops. Membership is now voluntary. More than 7,250,000 farmers joined 28,000 co-ops and 10,500 mutual relief associations in the first year under the occupation plan.

Materials Mark Is Set In October

More building materials were produced in October than ever before, the Commerce Department has announced.

The Department's production index for selected construction materials reached 64 per cent above the 1939 average during October, topping the previous peak of 63.8 per cent for August.

The October mark represented a 2.6 per cent gain over September, but the Department said this increase was "somewhat smaller than the seasonal upward movement normally expected from September to October."

Of the 20 materials included in the index, 17 were produced in greater quantity during October than in September. Among them were lumber, brick, cement, nails, soil pipe, plywood and gypsum board. The three materials showing declines were hardwood flooring, structural steel and mechanical stokers.

Production of all building materials during the first 10 months of 1948 ran 5.5 per cent ahead of the same period of 1947, the record production year so far.

REPRESENTATIVE ON PREMISES TODAY AND DAILY

LEO M. BERNSTEIN & Co.

1415 K St. N.W. — Realtors — ME. 5400

This Week In D. C. Real Estate

A LACK of speakers will be noticeable Monday at the monthly meeting of the Washington Building Congress at the Mayflower. A technical movie detailing the use and production of gypsum will be presented, instead of the usual speaker. While the film "White Magic" is of special interest to the construction industry, Paramount Studios were so favorably impressed with its entertainment value that they bought 900 copies to show throughout the country. Action is by Hollywood stars and the narration is handled by famous radio voices.

COSTS: The coming spring months will be the crucial period that will determine where construction costs stabilize or rise in 1949, according to Guy B. Panero, Inc., New York engineers. Panero predicted no 1949 price decline, but thought prices would stabilize enough to enable builders to predict costs with relative accuracy.

INSTALL: Annual officer installation dinner of the Washington Home Builders Association will be held at the Statler on January 14. President-elect William Banks will take over from Clarence W. Gosnell. Banks will leave the next day, with Clark Daniel, to attend a national meeting in New York called by Milton Brock, president of the National Association of Home Builders. Policy matters will be discussed. Entertainment at the local affair will be under the able direction of Edward R. Carr.

APPOINTED: Carl Lloyd has been appointed executive secretary of the Society of Industrial Realtors, an off-shoot of NAREB, replacing Earle P. Browne, who has resigned to accept a position as associate editor of the Architectural Forum. Lloyd was formerly with the Associated General Contractors and National Housing Agency.

Harvard E. "Brick" Hodges has been named sales manager for Home Realty Co., 1726 Pennsylvania ave. nw., which is celebrating its tenth year in the property promotion profession. Starting with one salesman, increasing business has upped the sales force to 14. Jesse Aiken is president.

EVANS LLOYD

Hodges was formerly with Ravenwood Realty Co., of Falls Church, Va.

MEET: A series of community meetings over the country, sponsored jointly by government and industry, will start soon in attempts to promote a 1949 economy house program. First meetings will be held February and March. Field officers of the FHA will be responsible for organizing the series.

BUILD: A survey by The Housing Institute of the nation's builders indicated that two out of every three were planning less home construction in the near future than they did a year ago at this time. And as far as mortgage financing goes, they haven't found it tighter—but neither has the situation improved.

STATISTICS: Number of nation's brickmason apprentices steadily increased during 1948. Rise in first eleven months was at a 26 per cent clip. . . . The old year saw an increase of 18,200 apprentices in the construction industry, a gain of 16 per cent, reaching a record high of 133,250. . . . Savings and loan associations put out 90-million dollars in home loans in October, the top financing month for such groups except one heavy month in 1947. . . . Expenditures for public works by Federal, State and local governments broke all peacetime records in 1948, totalling four-billion dollars. This was 75 per cent higher than during 1936 and 1937 when public works expenditures were being made freely to bolster economic recovery from the depression.

ARCHITECTS: Washington-Metropolitan Chapter of the American Institute of Architects has named the following to head its '49 activities: Harry Barrett, president; Paul A. Goettelmann, vice-president; Theodore W. Dominick, treasurer; Branch D. Elam, secretary; and Alex Van Keuren, assistant secretary.

NEW LOCATION: L. T. Gravatte, realtor, has announced the removal of his offices to 1518 K st. nw. This area rapidly is becoming famous as Washington's "Real Estate Row." Mr. Gravatte was formerly located in the Securities Building, 729 15th st. nw.

REALTORS: Annual installation of officers of the Montgomery County Real Estate Board will be held Monday night at the Kenwood Country Club, Bethesda, Md. J. Noble Boaz will replace R. P. Ripley, outgoing president. Walter Dayton, Bayside, Long Island, N. Y., realtor, will be the principal speaker. Dayton is past chairman of the Realtors Washington Committee.

CPM's: Raymond D. Evans, of Capital View Realty Co., has been elected president of the local chapter of Institute of Real Estate Managment, an affiliate of the National Association of Real Estate Boards. Other new officers include James Crain, of McKeever Co., vice president; J. Wesley Buchanan, head of his own firm, treasurer; Page Cornwell, of Carey Winston, Inc., secretary, and William McAinsh, jr., of Walker & Dunlop, publicity chairman.

BUILDERS: The Northern Virginia Builders Association has named Arthur Pomponio as president for the coming year at a meeting January 4 at the Washington Golf and Country Club. Pomponio is head of M. Pomponio & Sons, Inc. Kenton D. Hamaker, of Sharpe & Hamaker, Inc., is vice president; Charles Bittinger, jr., of Lyon, Inc., reelected secretary; L. S. Hurley, reelected treasurer. Named to the executive committee was Larry T. Dale of Dale Lumber Co.

NEW FIRM: J. Francis Harris 3d, has joined Robert Rodenberg as a partner in the newly formed Rodenberg Realty Corp., with offices in the Dupont Circle Building. The firm will specialize in sales, loans, property management and insurance. Rodenberg was head of the Baltimore Colts, pro football team last year. Harris was formerly with Legum and Gerber and Heaney and Co. Associated in a sales capacity with the new firm is Matthew B. Thorp, a former Army captain. Harris has announced the sale of Ten Oaks, a seven-acre gentleman's estate at Langley, Va., to Herbert Scoville of the Atomic Energy Commission for Sutherland G. Taylor, attorney. The sales price was around $50,000.

BRIEFS: Sale of two large downtown apartments appears imminent. The new owner may attempt to sell them under the cooperative plan . . . The remodeled office headquarters on 20th st. nw. of Zerkle Construction Co. has been profiled in the current edition of Practical Builder magazine. The same issue carries a picture and floor plan of one of the contemporary styled bungalows in Fairland, Va., executed by Clyde J. Verkerke . . . Architectural Forum is readyng a story which will say that Bureau of Labor Statistics figures on house "starts" and "activity" are not always correct. Forum editors have surveyed every new home built since the war in an Indiana city, compared them with BLS figures for the same area. The results are said to make interesting reading . . . National Association of Real Estate Board's weekly "Headlines" has this gem: "A report that the Socialist government of England would plan away a small village in the Berkshire country brought new protest against Britain's revolutionary Town and Country Planning Act." According to the report, a planning officer of the Government decided that Letcombe Bassett was too small to be efficient and wanted the population moved away. When the 161 villagers protested, the Minister of Town and Country Planning said their views would be considered; that they might even get a hearing.

Seasoned promissory notes for sale secured by trust deeds on valuable nearby Virginia homes. May be purchased individually at discount. Will bear rigid investigation.

Inspect Roof Gutters for Icicle Damage

After icicles have melted from the eves, all roof gutters and downspouts should be carefully examined for damage, straightened and refastened where necessary. If such damage is not repaired promptly, the next burden of ice or snow might rip off the gutters and downspouts.

Large icicles should not be allowed to hang from the roof. They will damage the roofing and gutters and are dangerous if they fall. Knock them off.

Federal Reserve Acts As 'Inflation Cushion'

By Sigrid Arne

TWO days before Christmas in 1913 Woodrow Wilson received a small committee in his White House study, picked up his pen and signed a paper which brought the Federal Reserve System into being.

Its purpose was to keep American business on a more even keel. As a central banking system it was unique in world history. It was, and is, really a sort of cooperative between Government and private banks under which the banks get a degree of aid in return for a degree of self-discipline.

The 35 years which have passed have seen the duties of the system remain constant. But there have been significant changes in the ways in which the Federal Reserve Board meets its duties.

At first the Reserve limited itself to supervision of banks. Now its orders reach so far afield that they touch any single family planning to buy an auto, a stove—a long list of things—on installment.

The Reserve's own history of itself records the change this way:

"Its original purposes, as conceived by its founders, were to give the country an elastic currency, to provide facilities for discounting commercial paper, and to improve the supervision of banking.

"Over the years the system has developed a broader objective, namely, to help prevent inflations and deflations, and to do its share in creating conditions favorable to sustained high employment, stable values, and a rising level of consumption."

The duty "to help prevent inflations and deflations" has been the cause for most of the moves the system has made since the war ended. Back in 1945 the then chairman of the board, Marriner Eccles, began to sound the warning that prices would skyrocket. He met little sympathy for his first warnings. But as the salaried family got into a tighter and tighter squeeze, both Federal Reserve and the Treasury Department made efforts to dry up the vast sums of money which were bidding for the short supply of goods. Finally Congress put a new blessing on the Federal Reserve's efforts.

Here are some of the steps the Federal Reserve has taken:

1. It laid down rules for installment buying. In effect, these limit the numbers of buyers of autos and household furnishing by forcing them to make a bigger down payment and to complete the payments quicker on anything costing $5000 or under.

2. It said those families which bought anything that costs under $1000 on installments could have only 15 months to pay up.

3. Those who go on the cuff for anything costing between $1000 and $5000 have 18 months to pay.

4. Those who buy autos have to put down a third of the price. Just a fifth is needed for a down payment on the rest of the list: stoves, dish-washers, radio and television sets, furniture, rugs, etc.

5. Together with the Treasury, Federal Reserve agreed that interest rates on certain short-term Treasury bills should be hiked. This was in order to attract investors. Whatever money went into such investments was just that much less floating around the stores.

6. Federal Reserve dried up another billion dollars by asking its central banks to increase reserves behind their savings deposits by that much.

Even with all these steps, Thomas B. McCabe, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, warned recently that at least some prices are likely to stay high for some time.

Expansible House Aid to Low Budget

Many families, financially unable to build the house of their choice, compromise by buying or erecting a small but complete house planned for later additions. The plan usually includes an unfinished attic, but ground floor rooms can be added without destroying architectural lines if a plan is chosen with this idea in mind. If possible, it is best to make the addition to the rear of the house so that it will not be too apparent.

Realtors Plan Installation

Theodore H. Maener, Omaha, will be installed as president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards at a banquet Tuesday night in the Statler Hotel. He will succeed Hobart C. Brady, Wichita.

Other officers and directors of NAREB, elected at the annual convention in November, will be installed also at this dinner, one of a series of meetings and affiliated institutes, January 7-13. About 450 realtors from over the country will attend.

Presidents of local real estate boards and State associations will have a two-day session, January 10 and 11, to outline their program of expanding home ownership for all income groups. The board of directors and executive committee of NAREB will outline the program of the association for the year.

A cooperative plan to aid in the lowering of costs of home building, extension of rent control and expansion of a secondary market for the purchase of mortgages are subjects expected to be considered during the series of meetings.

Land Cost Figured at 20% of Total HomeCost

Cost of land should represent not much more, nor less than 20 per cent of the total amount it is planned to spend on building a home, according to building industry economists. Thus, if a total expenditure of $15,000 is planned, the plot should not cost more than $3000, the house $12,000.

Create Your Own Inspiring View

Don't despair over a room without a view when it's so easy to make your own.

The light, a 15-watt fluorescent lamp, is in an oblong box-shaped case, finished to match the walnut table so that it will be inconspicuous. A long extension cord plugs into an outlet beneath the table.

Home lighting specialists point out that there are a number of uses for these small picture lights: on secretaries and high bookcases to give soft light; or on mantels or low bookcases to highlight a painting or unusual wall arrangement.

'No Loafing In America,' German Emigrants Warned

Frankfurt, Germany, Jan. 8 (AP).—A warning was issued to German "enthusiastic emigrants" by Heinrich Kierzek, a German editor, just back from the States.

"You've to work hard overseas and fruits of your work are often collected by your descendants and not by yourself," he wrote in an article rounding up his experience in the States. Kierzek, who is the editor of the American licensed Fuldaer Volkszeitung, belonged to a group of German journalists who completed a study tour through the United States recently. The trip was sponsored by the Rockefeller Foundation and Columbia University.

"Work tempo there is without mercy and loafing much more difficult from here," Kierzek told German workers.

"What is different in America" was banner-lined over his article. A remarkable feature of American people for Kierzek was that "they save money." "Every second worker in the States is feeling himself a future capitalist. One day, so he reckons, he will have saved so much money that he can open a shop, can buy a big piece of land or invest his money otherwise and become independent."

Comparing the living standard of an American worker with that of his German colleague, Kierzek comes to the result that "the United States workman can buy for his earnings about eight to ten times as much goods as a German worker in the same job can."

Unused Attic Remodeling Aided by FHA

The Federal Housing Administration urges remodeling of unused attics into rentable living quarters as an added source of income for budget-strained families, and is making easy credit available for such conversions, it was pointed out yesterday by the Construction Research Bureau, New York clearing house for building information.

Most attics will make at least two rooms without structural changes and winter is a good time for interior remodeling, the bureau said. Cost of conversion usually is low and rental income soon pays for it.

Money Available

Funds can be obtained from an FHA-approved lender. The loan is repayable in three years, with monthly payments usually less than the extra income. Before altering, permission must be obtained from the mortgage-holder. This usually is quickly granted, the same lender making the improvement loan.

First step is to insulate the attic roof, gable ends and dormers to make the attic livable in summer and winter, because heat passes through an uninsulated roof quicker than any other part of the house.

Fireproof insulation is easily fitted between roof rafters and wall studs, then covered with building or plaster board which can be painted, papered or left in its natural finish.

Heat Supply Simple

Several types of economical flooring are available, together with serviceable, low-priced doors, plumbing and other needed equipment. Plan the bath so it will come directly above piping on the floor below to economize on installation when extending plumbing to the attic.

Extending heating facilities to an attic seldom requires more than joining a pipe to a radiator on the floor below, bringing it up through the ceiling and attaching radiators in the attic. If this is too costly or complicated, or the house is heated by warm air, a self-contained oil-burning space heater can be used in each attic room.

'Oscars' for Best Agricultural Design

THE AMERICAN Institute of Architects has set up an "Oscar" board to honor architects who are judged winners in a contest of "best residences and schools completed in the past four years."

"The Institute," said President Douglas W. Orr, in announcing the yearly event, "desires to encourage the appreciation of excellence in architecture and to afford recognition of exceptional merit in new buildings."

The first program will be judged and winners announced at the eighty-first annual convention of the AIA set for Houston, March 15. The 1949 event will be confined to residential and school construction. Other classes of building will be judged in future years.

The AIA statement followed by one week an announcement of the Washington Board of Trade that it will sponsor its usual biennial awards for excellence in design of buildings and their appurtenances.

Firms and individuals desiring to make submissions in the local contest have until January 31 to forward photographs and informational data to the Board of Trade offies, Room 204, Evening Star Building.

For the national event, individual AIA chapters will submit entires of photographs and reproductions of plans for homes and schools. Winning entries will be exhibited at the Houston convention.

Bids for Va. Hospital To Be Opened Feb. 3

Plans for a 4-story and penthouse hospital, plus a 3-story and basement nurses' home, have been announced by the Commonwealth of Virginia for proposed erection at Piedmont Sanitorium, Burkeville, Va. Jos. H. Saunders, jr., of Alexandria, is the architect.

Bids will be opened February 3 at Burkeville to determine which building concern will get the construction contract.

Apartment Building Of 65 Units Planned

A 65-unit, 4-story apartment building will be erected at 8th and Longfellow sts. nw., under proposed plans of Jas. Vito, Inc., owner and builder. The rental project will measure 135 by 135 and be constructed of brick and cinder block. The builder is taking sub-bids.

Ample Supply Of Materials Seen for '49

Widespread, serious building material shortages are not expected to develop during the coming year.

Building materials production reached record levels in 1948, according to latest United States Department of Commerce figures, and although the department has made no prediction on the supply situation for 1949, material industry spokesmen say most materials will adequately fill 1949 needs.

The Department of Commerce forecasts that, despite near record building volume, supplies of materials, except some steel products and possibly cement, will balance demand during coming months. As 1948 neared its close, over-all production ran 6 per cent ahead of a year earlier when building material output set an all-time record.

Expected large-scale lumber shortages failed to develop in 1948 and lumber output rose 2 per cent over 1947, the department said. The lumber industry believed all shortages have ended as production is keeping well ahead of shipments from the mills. Even millwork, often a bottleneck during last summer's high volume of building, is now readily available in most sections. Douglas fir, Southern pine and plywood have dropped in price during recent weeks between 10 and 15 per cent.

Canada's Living Costs Dip After 3-Year Rise

Ottawa, Jan. 5 (U.P.).—Cost of living in Canada fell for the first time in three years during November, 1948, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics said today.

The index dropped 0.7 point, from 159.6 to 158.9, because of a small drop in the food index, the bureau said.

The latest index compares with 146 on December 1, 1947, and 120.1 on December 1, 1945.

From 20 to 25 per cent of the land surface of the globe is classed as colonial territory.

Let's Talk About Winter Flowers:

Narcissus Is Easy to Grow, Reasonably Priced

By Alfred Puts

PAPER-white narcissi are the most important winter-flowering bulbs for the home. They are reasonably priced, easy to grow and do not require a coldframe or outdoor pit to induce the growth of a vigorous root system. They are tender bulbs, which means they cannot endure freezing temperatures and in this respect differ from the closely related garden narcissus.

Growing them in bowls filled with pebbles and water, preferably rain water, is the most popular, easiest and most successful method. Add a walnut-size piece of charcoal to the water to help keep it sweet. Stone chips are unsuited, because their sharp edges interfere with the roots and they pack too tightly.

Although some gardeners are quite successful with them even though they violate some of the growing rules, best results are achieved by treating them intelligently. One rule is never to start them before the middle of October because of the tendency of the flowerbuds to blast before they emerge from the bulbs.

Lovely winter blooms of narcissi are eye inspiring.

Two Important Points

THE bowls should provide for at least a two-inch depth of water, and the base of the bulbs must be just above the water level. These two points are frequently disregarded, and they account for many failures. Setting the bulbs on top of the pebbles or with just a few additional ones around the base is bound to cause trouble later on. It deprives them of a solid anchorage, especially when the leaves lengthen and the flowerspike begins to open. There should be enough additional pebbles around the bulbs to hold them firmly in place, especially because there is no effective way to support the foliage and flowerstems.

Occasionally some bulbs fail to root as promptly as others. This results in delayed blooming, and some may root unevenly. These difficulties can be overcome by starting the bulbs pressed half an inch deep in moist sand. Keep them in a cool dark place, such as a large closet, adding water from time to time to keep the sand just moist. This permits close control and is by far the best method under all circumstances.

Examine the bulbs from time to time and transfer them to bowls when the roots are about half an inch in length. Group them in the bowls according to their root vigor, taking into consideration the size of the bulbs if there is any decided variance. The pay-off for this little extra trouble is having all those in one bowl bloom at the same time.

Even if started in pebbles, the bulbs will produce more uniform results if the containers are kept in a dark, cool place for two to three weeks or until they begin to grow actively. This is especially important with those started before the end of the year. When roots are plentiful and the tops begin to grow, move them to a brighter window and strive for a temperature between 60 and 65 degrees.

Long flabby leaves cannot be avoided if the temperature is too high or the plants do not receive sufficient light.

Check Water Level

KEEPING the water level below the base of the bulbs requires good judgment unless they are grown in transparent glass dishes. Inserting the finger along the edge without interfering with the roots is fairly accurate for determining the water level. If too high, tilt the container to spill some over the edge; if too low, add the required quantity.

Started November 1, they require about 55 days to come into flower. A planting made November 15 takes 50 days or 5 days less. This ratio of 5 days gained for each 15 days the planting is delayed remains quite constant during the planting season, which winds up about March 1 and produces flowers about March 15.

To insure a continuous display through the winter, the bulbs should be acquired now while they are available. Firm round bulbs about 1¼ inches in diameter are preferred to larger or smaller ones. Take them out of the bag and place them upright in a shallow tray. Shredded newspaper will help to keep them upright. Store them in a cool, dark place. As each new lot is started, select the bulbs according to top-growth they have made. You will find that some are much quicker starting than others.

C. of C. Plans Meetings to Spur Low-Cost Housing

The United States Chamber of Commerce has announced plans for a series of local meetings to be sponsored jointly by industry and Government throughout the country "to stimuate further interest in the low-cost housing market."

Meetings will be launched in February and March to explore possibilities of housing economies. Plans for the meetings were worked out, the chamber announced, at conferences in Washington between Government housing officials and building industry representatives.

"The aim is to promote a 1949 Economy Housing Program proposed by Raymond M. Foley," housing administrator, the chamber release said. Meetings, the chamber said it hoped, "will help provide more housing, where there is need for it, and also bring local organizations and representative leaders in the private home building industry in each community into mutually helpful relationship under the auspices of the local chamber."

Rules Offered For Figuring Paint Quantity

How much paint to buy is often a problem when the home-owner does his own painting. The following rules are offered as a guide:

Multiply distance around the house by height to the eaves to determine over-all number of square feet; add square feet of gable area (one-half of height times greatest width). Subtract total number of square feet of window area. Divide the result by 400. The result is the number of gallons of exterior paint to buy for one coat; double it for two coats.

For inside work, multiply total distance around the room by the wall height and deduct 15 square feet for each window and door. The length of baseboard is considered as square feet. Length of room multiplied by width gives ceiling area. One window frame and sash contain about 40 square feet; the average home staircase, 135 square feet.

Allow 135 square feet for each side of a door and its frame; 10 square feet for only one side of the frame; 20 square feet for only one side of the door. Multiply the front area of radiators by four to get total area of surface to be painted.

There is no layman's yardstick to determine the amount of interior paint required because of the varied surfaces encountered. Paint dealers can estimate the amount if given accurate figures on square footage and a description of the surfaces.

HOME HINTS

THE fire on the hearth which can give so much comfort and cheer in cold winter weather needs to be built with care to burn efficiently without waste of wood and heat, foresters of the United States Department of Agriculture report.

The neat housekeeper, who has her fireplace swept clean of all ashes, is an inefficient fire builder, the foresters say. Ashes should be kept level with the andirons to provide a bed of glowing charcoal which yields steady heat and helps ignite new logs as they are added.

Familiar as is the term "backlog," not every housewife knows its practical use. Before laying the fire, put one log on the floor of the hearth against the back wall and behind the andirons. This log keeps the draft from drawing the fire directly into the masonry, and wasting heat.

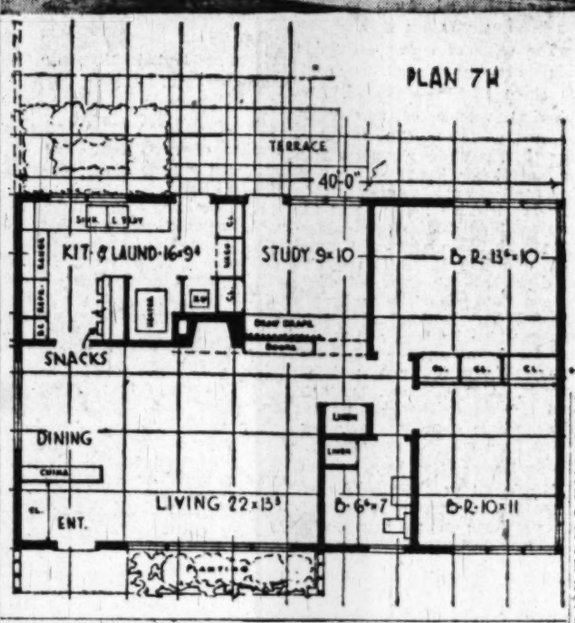
The woodpile for fireplace use may well contain both split and whole round logs, and both soft and hard wood. Split wood kindles faster than round logs, so is the choice for starting the fire. The round logs may be added later to keep the fire going steadily.

Soft woods from cone-bearing trees, like pine, in general make a quicker, hotter fire than hard woods, but hard woods have the advantage of burning longer. A combination of the two, therefore, makes a successful fire. The woods that give the most heat for their weight are hickory, oak, beech, sweet birch, hard maple, rock elm, locust and long-leaf pine.

Green wood—that is, wood which has not been cut and seasoned long enough to dry out properly—is poor in heat value because of the moisture it contains. From 25 to more than 50 per cent of the weight of green wood is water, depending on the variety. The heat required to drive off the water is lost as far as warming the room is concerned.

An added disadvantage is that green wood causes more creosote, soot and other deposits to form in the chimney than dry wood.

Designed on a Four-Foot Multiple System



AN ECONOMY HOUSE designed on the modular plan of 4-foot multiples to accommodate standard sizes of materials, this layout produces a simple rectangle in form, but has the appearance of a popular rambler. This is plan 7H by Richard Pollman, architect for the Homograf Planning Corp., 11711 East Eight Mile rd., East Detroit, Mich. A study opening on a terrace can be used for a third bedroom. A combination kitchen-laundry room houses the heating unit. The house covers 960 square feet and contains 7776 cubic feet without basement. The garage can be added later

Vienna Streets Reflect Politics

Vienna, Jan. 8 (AP).—Vienna is known as a city of tradition, with binding ties to its glorious past—but you'd never know it by the street signs.

A good example of what current events do to Vienna's nomenclature is the little park which stands before the famous Votive church. For many years it was called, naturally enough, "Votive Platz." Then came the end of World War I and the name was changed to "Freiheits Platz" (Liberty Place). Then came the Nazis and it was changed to "Hermann Goering Platz." Then came the end of World War II and it was changed to "Roosevelt Platz."

Further along the famous Ringstrasse—the broad avenue that circles the original Inner City—is the tree-lined section running between the Parliament building and the Burg Theater. For years it was known as "Franzenring," after Emperor Franz Josef I. When the empire collapsed November 12, 1918, it became "The Ring of November 12." In a few years it was renamed "Dr. Ignatz Seipelring" in honor of Austria's outstanding chancellor of the pre-Anschluss period. With the arrival of the Nazis, it became known as "Buerckelring" for the first Austrian Gauleiter, Joseph Buerckel. In 1945, with Buerckel and the Nazis out, it reverted to "Dr. Ignatz Seipelring."

The Viennese have little hope that it won't be changed again soon. Seipel was prelate of the Catholic Church—and the Russian Kommandantura is on that particular section of the Ringstrasse.

Other postwar changes have found "Adolf Hitler Platz" again given its original name of "Rathausplatz," and "Schwarzenbergplatz" renamed "Stalinplatz."

HOME HINTS

THE fire on the hearth which can give so much comfort and cheer in cold winter weather needs to be built with care to burn efficiently without waste of wood and heat, foresters of the United States Department of Agriculture report.

The neat housekeeper, who has her fireplace swept clean of all ashes, is an inefficient fire builder, the foresters say. Ashes should be kept level with the andirons to provide a bed of glowing charcoal which yields steady heat and helps ignite new logs as they are added.

Familiar as is the term "backlog," not every housewife knows its practical use. Before laying the fire, put one log on the floor of the hearth against the back wall and behind the andirons. This log keeps the draft from drawing the fire directly into the masonry, and wasting heat.

The woodpile for fireplace use may well contain both split and whole round logs, and both soft and hard wood. Split wood kindles faster than round logs, so is the choice for starting the fire. The round logs may be added later to keep the fire going steadily.

Soft woods from cone-bearing trees, like pine, in general make a quicker, hotter fire than hard woods, but hard woods have the advantage of burning longer. A combination of the two, therefore, makes a successful fire. The woods that give the most heat for their weight are hickory, oak, beech, sweet birch, hard maple, rock elm, locust and long-leaf pine.

Green wood—that is, wood which has not been cut and seasoned long enough to dry out properly—is poor in heat value because of the moisture it contains. From 25 to more than 50 per cent of the weight of green wood is water, depending on the variety. The heat required to drive off the water is lost as far as warming the room is concerned.

An added disadvantage is that green wood causes more creosote, soot and other deposits to form in the chimney than dry wood.

Home Mishaps 112 For Week

During the past week 113 District residents were treated at local hospitals for injuries received in home accidents, the District Red Cross Safety Services reported.

Two adults also died from fall and burn injuries.

Causes of the 113 injuries were given as follows: 43, falls; 12, burns; 1, accidental discharge of firearm; 1, accidental poisoning; 3, near-suffocation; 10, foreign objects in the eye, nose, throat or stomach; 28, cuts; 3, bruises; 12, unclassified.

Among adults injured was one who cut his ear on a nail protruding from a door, and two persons were burned when firecrackers exploded in their hands.

Among children injured was a small girl who ran nito a lghted cigarette her father was smoking and sustained an eye burn, a child who ate 14 five-grain sulfa tablets, another who drank kerosene, and four who fell over roller skates and toys.

Accidents for the same period in 1948 totaled 96, and there had been no deaths.

Realtors to Offer Plan to Counter Public Housing

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 8 (AP).—T. H. Maenner, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards stated here this week that his group will soon offer a cooperative housing program as a counter measure to public housing.

The plan will consist, Maenner said, of single homes, duplexes, and probably multiple dwellings.

At the same time Maenner called on other organizations to join in what he termed "a growing crusade to preserve American free enterprise by blocking continued governmental controls."

"We will continue to fight all forms of public housing which is nothing more than human warehousing and seeks to destroy the very essence of home ownership," Maenner said.

He spoke before the annual organizational meeting of the Pennsylvania Realtors Association.

Building Sales Volume Which Set '48 Record Will Continue This Year, Experts Believe

WITH SALES volume for new construction and repair work having attained an all-time high dollar peak of 26 billion dollars, the construction industry, as usual in prosperous times, provided greater support than any other single industrial group to total business activity last year.

The value of new construction completed rose nearly 30 per cent, to about 18 billion dollars. The physical volume of new space created, while exceeding that during 1947, was somewhat less than in several previous years.

Unanimous opinion of experts in the construction field is that the present high volume of construction will be substantially maintained during 1949. This augurs well not only for every individual whose standard of living largely depends on the kind of shelter under which he lives and works, but for our other basic industries, such as the various raw materials groups, transportation, utilities and the major financing institutions, whose operations gain impetus from construction activity.

Works Delayed Too Long

Nearly all predictions of Government and industry representatives indicate a slight increase for total construction activity this year but expect a decline of private construction. The biggest increases are expected to occur in public works such as schools, institutions, roads and municipal engineering projects. The consensus is that local, State and Federal projects have been postponed as long as they can be without seriously inconveniencing the public.

But F. W. Dodge Corp. estimates that total contracts awarded in the 37 States east of the Rockies will decline by 2 per cent, assuming that building costs stay at 1948 levels.

There never was a time when so many of the experts were willing to forecast so sharp a drop in private residential building in face of such enormous demand as exists today. Miles L. Colean, in his forecast for the Producers' Council, estimates for example, that residential building will contract more sharply than any other classification of private building.

He expects a drop of 11.3 per cent in the dollar value of private residential building, although estimating a 33.3 per cent increase in the far smaller volume of publicly constructed residential building. Assuming stable costs, F. W. awarded for all residentials building to decline by 7 per cent.

925,000 Dwelling Units

Despite a slight decline in private residential building in the third quarter of last year, the total of such construction, both on the basis of dollar volume and the number of units completed (an estimated 925,000 units), was the highest in history.

High building costs, marked by a 10 per cent increase in 1948, repeating a similar increase in 1947; maintenance of rent controls on existing structures, which has deterred new construction for sale, and a slackening of the intense demand experienced immediately after the war appear to be the principal factors indicating a possible slow-up in home construction.

The usual desire of American families for better homes is, however, intensified beyond all previous proportions owing to increased incomes, and there has been widespread acceptance this year of the view that building should be postponed until costs are lower. Moreover, residential building has not yet attained the proportional relationship to other types of building which it has enjoyed in other prosperous periods.

It may be hazarded, thus, that if building costs should begin to tend toward lower levels, present estimates for private residential building would be considerably exceeded. Building costs could drop rather sharply and suddenly, as many of the major construction materials are now in good supply, and some, like lumber, are already showing price declines. In addition, wage rates are not as firmly established throughout the construction as in other industries.

Sees Industrial Work Off

Industrial and commercial building, one of the mainstays of construction for the last seven years, seems, on the other hand, to be due for a further decline. Colean's estimate is that industrial building will drop about 7 per cent, and F. W. Dodge Corp. expects "manufacturing building" awards to drop about 15 per cent, again assuming that costs remain at present high levels.

Whatever the situation is with respect to construction costs, industrial building is believed due to contract sharply, because the great bulk of industry's postwar expansion plans have been completed and pipelines for finished goods are in many instances comfortably filled.

Public works and public utility construction may well continue to increase for several years to come, F. K. Dodge Corp. foresees an increase of about 10 per cent in contracts awarded within these categories in 1949.

It is interesting to note that public spending for new building is expected by the Federal Works Agency to account for possibly as much as five billion dollars or only one billion dollars short of the total for all new construction in 1929.

A Lesson for Rural U. S.

64 Grangers Team Up To Win $25,000 Prize

By Tom Schlesinger

HILLSBORO, N. C., Jan. 8.—Sixty-four members of a small grange in the north central part of the State have showed rural communities all over the country what any group can do for its improvement by just getting together.

Their achievement was brought to the attention of the Nation when the Schley Grange took $25,000 first prize in a national community service contest sponsored by the Sears Roebuck Foundation in conjunction with the National Grange.

These 64 Orange County farmers bested the efforts of some 1400 granges in 37 States. They will put the money into a new building.

Five Major Needs

WHAT did these people do that was so outstanding? Master Fred T. Freitzel said they didn't really do much out of the ordinary.

"We carried out five projects without high-pressure campaigns or much publicity of any kind," he said. "We just worked together on things that the community needed."

The five main schemes decided upon last January were the renovation and landscaping of the community Baptist Church; a field day which attracted 5000 persons to see them make over a worn-out, badly eroded farm under the direction of the Soil Conservation Service and the Agricultural Extension Service; the construction of a 15-mile telephone line and the setting up of a youth recreation center.

Farms throughout this dairy area already reflect the improvements which were demonstrated at the farm rebuilding. The fields now covered with green winter crops, the attractively different terrace patterns, the tractors in the sheds all prove that "the people around here are right smart to take to anything they think is good."

Sports for All

WITH $700 gained from selling barbecue and brunswick stew at the field day, the women bought game equipment for a youth center in the Grange Hall. Ground was cleared for tennis and volley ball. Horseshoe pits were fashioned. Inside the building, ping-pong tables, games, darts, a phonograph, etc., were installed.

The lack of telephone facilities was a major deficiency in the community. The planning committee conferred with phone company officials and came to an agreement. The men of Schley would obtain the right-of-way and set up the poles. The phone company would string the wire and install the phones.

Actually, when it came time for the national judges to inspect the projects, no wire had been strung. So the Grangers been strung. So the grangers of wire which connected eight families. This was to show what 42 other families would have early this year.

The grange doesn't intend to rest on its accomplishments. Equipping the new Grange Hall has top priority. Then it's going after new membership. With its new facilities, it can offer inducements to farmers over a much wider area.

Mortar Damage

The mortar between bricks or concrete blocks in walks and outdoor steps is frequently loosened by successive freezing and thawing. This should be examined after a thaw and repaired immediately, especially if steps have been damaged.

4 From D.C. Win Interior Cash Awards

Four Washingtonians were among the 23 employes of the Department of the Interior receiving cash awards totaling $1415 for suggestions to improve the service of work of the department, according to an announcement by Secretary J. A. Krug.

The highest award of $300 went to Sumner P. Wing of 1730 New Hampshire ave. nw., for a system of applying poll-type statistical sampling methods to selection and testing of construction materials.

Wing, who is 59 and has been a civil enginer for the Bureau of Reclamation for 19 years, said it took him about ten years to convince officials his idea would work, with the help of three papers he delivered before technical societies.

The method will save the department about $15,000 a year, it was estimated, and Wing believes it will save $100,000 annually if it is used by other departments and by private industry. The cooperation of the Bureau of Reclamation laboratories made it possible for him to devise the new method, he said.

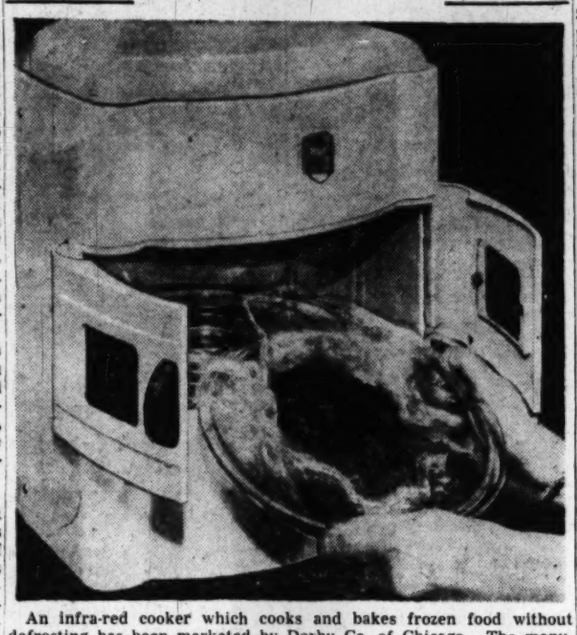
A graduate of Leland Stanford University, he has lived in the District for two years. This is the third award he has received.

Preston H. Harris, 3526 New Hampshire ave., nw., an attorney in the Bureau of Land Management, has received $25 for suggesting discontinuance of a transmittal letter in mailing decisions.

John W. Bailey, 4247 Rusk st. ne., of the photostat and blueprint section, Bureau of Land Management, received $100 for suggesting photgraphic signatures on patent record copies, saving an estimated $1162 a year.

Harry I. Richmond, 1305 17th st. nw., a clerk, received $10 for suggesting a phone booth sign requesting that doors be left open to show the phones are not in use.

Product Previews

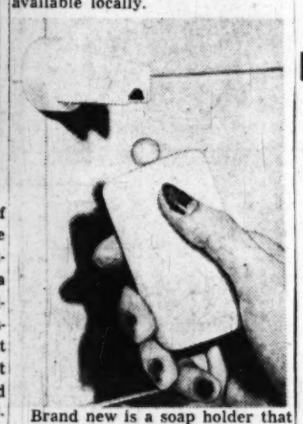


An infra-red cooker which cooks and bakes frozen food without defrosting has been marketed by Dorby Co. of Chicago. The manufacturer says the cooker "cooks the food itself, not the utensil." Other claims for the new device include: Cooks in 30 to 60 per cent less time; no waiting for cooking utensil to heat; no cooking odors; retains natural health-giving values of food with all flavor; no heat after switch is off. All dishes are prepared in Pyrex or other heat-resistant glass utensils. Available at the Hecht Co., and Lubar, Inc., according to the manufacturer.

A boon to winter drivers is this plastic cover which keeps the windshield free of frost, sleet and snow when the car is parked. An elastic tape makes the cover adjustable to any windshield, except the new Hudson and bantam cars. Easily fastened in place, the tape holds the cover firmly in place. Developed by Mac Tee's, 3027 Naylor rd. se., and available at Lansburgh's.

A brush attached to a bottle of cleaning fluid makes this unique cleaning device. The brush is saturated by holding the brush in a downward position and simultaneously pressing a button releasing the fluid to the bristles. It is recommended for use as a spot remover on clothing, for hats and shoes, cleaning of office equipment. The fluid is nonexplosive, noninflammable, according to the manufacturer. Called the "Speed-Mo," it is available at Capitol Office Supply Co., 1129 Vermont ave. nw.

A simplified method of permanently etching monograms or designs on ashtrays, mirrors, glasses, name plates or other glass items had been created by a "etch-on-glass kit." This is how it works—A design is outlined on stencil tape from a design book furnished in the kit. This tracing is cut out with a stencil knife. The adhesive-backed stencil tape is fixed on the glassware. A special cream is rinsed off, the design dabbed dry with a soft cloth. When the stencil tape is removed, the design is etched on the glass surface. Made by Cleveland Crafts Co., 770 Carnegie, Cleveland Ohio. Not yet available locally.



Brand new is a soap holder that is not a dish, but a hanger, and a magnetic one at that! The Soap Gripper is a wall-holder of durable plastic containing a permanently magnetized metal receptacle that attracts and holds a metal ball stem. When the stem is pushed into a bar of soap, up to 40 per cent savings results in elimination of "jellied" soap, says the maker, Urey W. Edger, 4540 W. Broadway, Louisville 11, Ky. The unit can be screwed or cemented to the wall so the soap will hang high and dry. Not yet available locally.

Refinements, Location Set Home Price

WHAT factors influence the selling price of a house?

The fact that a $25,000 house may be twice as large as the $8000 house a few blocks away is only one reason why it costs more, points out the Construction Research Bureau, New York clearing house for building information.

The higher-priced residence stands on a larger, more costly plot of ground in a more desirable location in the community; contains much more equipment and other fittings and refinements of higher quality; has an individual custom-planned design not found in the low-priced home.

The $8000 home occupies a plot seldom wider than 60 feet. The house contains an average of 800 square feet of living space, no more than two bedrooms and one white part-tiled bath. The $25,000 house has 1400 to 1600 square feet of living space; three or more bedrooms and two or more colored, fully tiled bathrooms. This additional size alone adds $5000 to $7500 to construction cost.

Most zoning ordinances require that a house of this size shall occupy a plot 80 feet or more in width. This extra size may add up to $2000 more to cost. If on a paved street cost goes up another $1000 to $1500; proximity to a school may add $250 or more.

The small house usually is of frame construction or may have a front wall of masonry veneer. It lacks storm windows, usually has no garage. Included in its selling price are kitchen range of medium quality, laundry tubs, medium grade kitchen floor covering, a few built-in kitchen cabinets, automatic water heater and sometimes a refrigerator and automatic washer. A fireplace is a rarity. The heating plant is small. Many small homes have no subflooring.

The price of the $25,000 home soars in $500 and $1000 jumps when including a fireplace, top-quality hardware, slate or tile roof, outdoor terrace, garage, sliding closet doors, picture windows, basement recreation room, rare wood for interior trim and doors, air conditioning, complete automatic laundry.

Bingle Tops Poll Of Movie Herald For Fifth Time

By Richard L. Coe

THE MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S annual polls based not on prophecy but on history, are always the most reliable and informative of the poll-plethora with which we're all surfeited this time of year.

Once again, with the Nation's exhibitors, it's Bing Crosby in number one position for the fifth consecutive year.

As we all too well know, it's possible to read a packet of things into polls that just aren't there, but this 17-year-old vote of the theater managers has begun to be as revealing a barometer as can be imagined.

For in those 17 years the poll has been taken, only six stars have held top position and they all have something in common, not only with each other but with the "Industry's" function as it's understood by its leaders.

First of these "top stars" was an actress of over 60, nothing much to look at, but a lady with the gritty vitality and earthy humor for which our land is famed. She'd been a performer all her life, had a series of fantastic ups and downs to which she often referred irreverently and for all her success you never heard any of her coworkers begrudge her ranking position. Her name? Marie Dressler.

Two Extremes

MARIE'S TOP SPOT was taken by another oldster, another longtime entertainer whose popularity overlapped the bounds of show business. Like Marie, his was the earthy, outspoken approach, a natural wit. His zest for living has made his name still loved over a decade after his untimely death. His name? Will Rogers.

Will's place was taken by someone at the opposite end of the age bracket, an astonishingly sunny personality whose vogue held her at the top of the money-making stars for four years. She could sing, she could dance, but more than anything else she seemed to personify that quality all the top stars have had in common. She was, in short, someone you knew. Who? Shirley Temple.

Shirley's successor was another youngster, still one of the most electric entertainers in the business, a chap born in the traditional backstage trunk. If early environment and training had anything to do with it, this three-time winner of the showmen's votes made the most of it. To people around the world he epitomized the super-extrovert of American boyhood and, to his credit, he's still a magical entertainer. Yes, Mickey Rooney.

A. and C. in '42

THE WAR, I THINK, had something to do with Mickey's two successors. In 1942 the top spot was held by Abbott and Costello. With "Buck Privates," "In the Navy" and "Keep 'em Flying" as their releases at the time every mother's son was intimately connected with such activities, Abbott and Costello hit the bull's eye with laughs about what was on everyone's mind. This year, after a three-year absence, they're back in the top ten running in third position.

By 1943 pin-up girls were big news and the greatest of them all came into her own, the gal whose architecture looked as if it had been delicately chiseled from fresh peaches. At last glamour hit the top of the box office heap, but it had taken 12 years for what looked like a natural to become a fact.

But this girl had a little more than glamour. She seemed to be somebody millions might have a date with and people still think of her in that way, for this year she's in second place, as she was last year. Who else but Betty Grable?

The Crosby guy, of course, is as phenomenal in his way as his predecessors have been in theirs. Here you have a balding, 44-year-old father of a large family the Nation's favorite entertainer, not only in this poll but in others, including the Rural Motion Picture Poll conducted by the magazine Country Gentleman.

Not All Glamour

SO THERE YOU HAVE the six most successful entertainers of the past generation and when you come right down to it, glamour in the high-pressured sense isn't what it takes by a long shot. About none of those six do you read juicy scandals. They're all the sort of entertainers the youngsters—backbone of Hollywood's gold—go for and they're the sort who'd be at home if they dropped in on any family for pot-luck dinner.

Remarkable? No, I don't think it is in the least. For it is with just such qualities Hollywood seeks to appeal. When all the webs of colossal claims, petty intrigues, violent humors are cleared away, those are the stars who epitomize what Hollywood longs to be.

Their runners-up, too, have some interesting qualities which can start you thinking.

This year's next nine come in this order: Betty Grable, Abbott and Costello, Gary Cooper, Bob Hope, Humphrey Bogart (!), Clark Gable, Cary Grant, Spencer Tracy and Ingrid Bergman.

Releases Count

NATURALLY, the release of certain pictures—or the lack of any pictures at all—affects these standings. Bing, for instance, made two this year, "The Emperor Waltz," which some folks found pretty sophisticated for their ideas of what they prefer from Bing, and "Road to Rio," which he made with pal Hope.

Miss Bergman, though, slipped this year from third to tenth place because she appeared in only one new release, "Arch of Triumph" and in that one she played a part frankly distasteful to many of her fans.

Miss Grable's second place came her way through three popular films, "That Lady in Ermine," "When My Baby Smiles at Me" and "Mother Wore Tights." Betty and Ingrid were the only ladies in that top ten.

Remarkable in the males who held the eight spots, too, is their staying quality. Clark Gable, who played in "Homecoming" and "The Hucksters," has been in all but three of the top ten during the 17 years. Gary Cooper, with "Unconquered" and "Good Sam" as his releases,

How an Actress Wins an Academy Award, Perhaps?

AN OSCAR FOR OLIVIA? Olivia de Havilland as the heroine of Mary Jane Ward's popular book, "The Snake Pit," appears to be in the lead for the Academy Award to the past year's finest screen actress. You'll be able to judge for yourself when the film arrives on the Palace screen Thursday. Here's Olivia with Mark Stevens, as the perturbed husband visits his wife in the crowded place of torment which is coping with thousands of mental tragedies. Choral Work A Great Aid To Singers

By Paul Hume

A CORRESPONDENT in Alexandria asks what Erik Satie means when he writes a piece called Genuine Flabby Prelude for a Dog—or another called The Woman Who Talked Too Much. Those seem to be questions whose obvious dangers preclude any answer. Satie was a man of genius and a satirist of unusual gifts.

From M. F. in Arlington, Va., "Is there some subtle way in which you could write an article extolling the benefits of choral singing to trained singers? Many of the greatest singers of the day sang in choruses and believed that it was the finest training for a keen sense of pitch, sight-reading, the true sense of self-less abandon to the beauty of the whole."

M. F. is absolutely right. Many soloists today lack any comprehension of balancing their voices with others, and are utter failures at reading music at sight. Yet these two attributes alone are among the real supports of our finest singing artists. A singer who can form lovely tones and doesn't know what to do with them is like a brand new rubber tire with no wheel to surround.

Music and CBS

JAMES H. FASSETT, supervisor of music for Columbia Broadcasting System, writes:

"In answer to your statement that 'their content (the Philharmonic Sunday programs) is watered down to what CBS thinks the radio public wants to hear' I should like to explain the relation between CBS and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society. The Columbia Broadcasting System has a contract with the Philharmonic, as it has had for the past 18 years, and under it CBS has no control of any kind over the selection of repertory for the broadcast concerts. And the sponsor of the Philharmonic concerts has never raised issues of any kind regarding repertory, either with CBS or with the Philharmonic. As a matter of fact, the sponsor has never discussed the selection of music either with CBS or with the Philharmonic."

In this, Fassett is of course absolutely correct, and we are sorry to have given any other impression. Responsibility for what you hear on Sundays from the Philharmonic rests with the

Tuesday's Hallelujah Day

East, Midwest TV Webs Getting Hitched

By Sonia Stein

THE existing Midwest and East Coast television networks will be linked for the first time Tuesday night and the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which operates the coaxial cables, and the TV networks will join in ceremonies marking the event.

The pooled telecast, which will be carried by all Washington TV stations Tuesday beginning at 9:30 p. m., will start with the customary formal comments on the historic occasion by Wayne Coy, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission; Leroy A. Wilson, president of A. T. & T., and the presidents of the TV networks.

After the official business is over, each network will have 15 minutes to showcase its wares. CBS opens at 10, with Arthur Godfrey emceeing a show with Singers Jeanette Davis and Bill Lawrence, Newsman Douglas Edwards and some puppets.

Fifteen minutes later DuMont will present a video-planned band conducted by Ted Steele. Steele has selected his 16-piece orchestra with an eye to personality and appearance as well as musicianship. All 16 are multitalented, playing five or more instruments each, singing, and acting as comedians.

NBC takes over at 10:30 with Milton Berle and a variety show.

At 10:45 ABC will take the last segment, with Marc Connolly of the "Actors' Studio" program introducing a play, "Stand By for Crime," which will be telecast from Chicago.

All Four to Share

THE link, which connects Philadelphia and Cleveland via Pittsburgh, joins more than 30 stations in 14 cities from the Atlantic to the Mississippi. More than a quarter of the Nation's population is in the area covered.

All four TV networks will share use of the westbound cable, and will continue to share the southbound cables on a reallocated basis. (Two more westbound cables are promised by the middle of the year.)

It was expected that WPIX in New York and WGN-TV in Chicago would form a partial fifth network, and the New York station had even laid plans to participate in the opening ceremonies. However, only three hours a week was allocated to the new network on the cable, and WPIX decided it wouldn't play. Too much trouble for only three hours.

This saves the other nets from having their time cut, for the moment.

Reallocations which come about as the result of the Midwest connection (which uses one of the three available southbound cables as far as Philadelphia) are not really major, but two of the local stations have been holding up some new local shows, rather than launch them in times which will later be usurped by network shows. After reallocations are set, the new shows will be put into their permanent niche.

Banging on the Door

EVER since American University has included some TV instruction along with its radio courses, professional radio people and Government department heads concerned with spreading information have been banging on the door looking for advanced courses in TV tailored to their needs.

Gordon Hubbell, director of radio and television for the university, took the problem to President Paul Douglass, and to Kenneth Berkeley, general manager of WMAL and WMAL-TV which works closely with the university's radio and TV activities.

Next Saturday a Television Workshop conducted by WMAL-TV's production manager, Arthur Weld, will begin its 15 weekly sessions. Experienced radio people (and even some with TV experience) will meet at the station in four-hour sessions to try all phases of the new medium including camera work and other technical chores so that as actors or producers they will better understand the medium.

The registration was closed virtually before it was open. The facilities at WMAL-TV will accommodate 20 people, but Hubbell had received 22 acceptances out of the 25 prospective registrants he phoned, before he realized he'd exceeded his limit.

He is currently trying to work out plans for another workshop to run concurrently at another TV station, or to follow this one at WMAL-TV.

"THE NBC THEATER" will go into the 8:30 Sunday night spot in place of "Command Performance" as originally announced. (Couldn't get the title rights on the other one.) The Screen Director's Guild will cooperate in the presentations which begin tonight on WRC with "Stage Coach," starring John Wayne.

"Living 1949" which superseded "Living 1948" as might have been expected, is going to be carried on WRC at 4:35 p. m. hereafter, beginning this afternoon. WRC

Radio in Review

Benny Whacks the Critics

By John Crosby

IN THE anniversary issue of Variety, Jack Benny, the $2,260,000 comedian, has broken a lance over the skulls of radio critics, an easy target and one that hardly justifies the expense—lances being pretty expensive these days. If you overlook the extravagance though, Benny has a pretty good point and, since I've temporarily run short of lances of my own to break and comedians to break them against, I thought I'd turn the place over to Benny for the day. (Since columnists haven't as much space at their disposal as comedians, this has had to be drastically condensed.) Take it away, Benny.

"The past several years I've noticed radio editors gang up on radio comedians and accuse them of using the same type of humor year after year. Reviewers admit the comedians have top comedy shows, and funny programs. Their beef is the programs always use the same characters and situations.

"The battle cry seems to be, 'The listeners want a change.' But do they?

"Amos and Andy were public favorites in 1929. They still are. Eddie Cantor, Al Jolson, Fred Allen, Burns and Allen, have all ranked high in the Hoppers for a dozen years. These comics have spent years perfecting their individual comedy styles, and would be completely lost without them. Would the critics have George and Gracie darken their dialogue and Amos and Andy jump into domestic comedy? Bob Hope has a pace and brashness I envy. But I know that I'd be floundering in 'flop-sweat' if I tried Bob's delivery. I do flatter myself into thinking Hope can't get as much out of a 'Well!!!' as I do.

"It took 17 years to develop the characters on my show. Each week we've tried to inject a new situation, idea, or character into our script. What happens? A reviewer comes along, says the show was great, the audience loved it, the script was hilarious . . . BUT . . . I was the same stingy, toupee-topped, faulty fiddler; Mary was still snippy; Phil continued as a fugitive from Alcoholics Anonymous; Dennis was still silly; Don continued to be fat, and Rochester was the same sassy butler he always was.

BENNY

"Now, I've been reading this reviewer's column for many years, and it's a darn good column. But every week, every year, this columnist's style of writing is always the same. Always, verbs, pronouns and adjectives. Why doesn't he get some new things? (Ed. note: If he's referring to me, I added prepositions in 1946, first man in the business to change with the times.)

"Radio critics scream, 'Why don't the comics stop already with programs about Thanksgiving and Christmas. The air is filled with them.' What would they have me do on Christmas? Set off skyrockets and roman candles and have Phil wish me a Happy Fourth of July?

"On opening programs, why do the comics all do the same thing—talk about what they did on their vacations? Well, let me ask you something. If you worked with someone closely and then separated for the entire summer, what would be the first thing you'd ask him when you saw him again? How he liked Jane Russell in 'The Outlaw?'

"Oh, well, television is with us now, and I'm waiting for some reviewer to say, 'It was an enjoyable video show, but darn it, always the same old faces.'"

'State of Anemia'

Reds Raise A Row Over The Theater

By Joseph Newman

New York Herald Tribune

MOSCOW, Jan. 8.—A serious interchange concerning the state of the Soviet theater occurred at a recent meeting of Soviet writers, it was reported here today.

At the meeting E. G. Pogodin, a Soviet playwright, observed what he termed a "state of anemia" in the contemporary Soviet theater. K. Zubov, art director of the Maly Theater, walked out in protest against Pogodin's statement. Alexander Fadeyev, prominent novelist and secretary of the General Writers' Union, vigorously denounced Pogodin at a meeting of the board of the writers' union.

Pogodin maintained that theaters in Russia are now all like the Moscow Art Theater. He was quoted as saying, "It seems to me that a certain state of anemia occurred in the theaters of Russia after the war—in some earlier than in others. In my opinion, the reason is that directives and compulsion regarding one play or another appeared first in the theater and then among playwrights, harmfully influencing the theater and play writing."

He indicated that he thought plays were being written to order for production by the Moscow Art Theater, which is one of the leading theaters in the Soviet Union.

Pogodin said it was different in the past, when theaters had their own "face" (individuality).

Films at Corcoran

THE Corcoran Gallery of Art announces that it will sponsor a winter season of six modern picture revivals similar to its successful autumn series.

Attendance at the programs is limited to members of the Association of the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Particulars for joining may be obtained from Miss Ellen Morrison at the museum.

Films to be shown in the series include Greta Garbo in "Anna Christie," January 14; the Russian epic, "Alexander Nevsky," January 24 and, at a date to be announced, Noel Coward's "Brief Encounter."

French '9' at Shoreham

LES COMPAGNONS DE LA CHANSON, a season's end sensation of the last Gotham stage year, have turned themselves into a night club act and will entertain at dinner and supper shows in the Shoreham's Blue Room for the week beginning tomorrow night.

These are the nine singing Frenchmen whose sophisticated comedy was introduced in this country by Singer Edith Piaf. They work as a "choral society," spoofing the classic composers in a style that sometimes seems straight, at others seems that of three sets of Marx Brothers.

The group was organized after the partition of France as an effort to relieve that noted wartime military figure, General Ennui. The spoofing idea developed gradually, led by one of the boys, Jean-Louis Jaubert, now the troupe's director. The kidding so enraged the original choral director that he resigned in protest.

Stein's 'Dopey' on Ice

BACK with the "Ice-Capades," which begins a run January 27 at Uline's Arena, will be Chuckie Stein, who stretches only 48 inches but has built himself into an integral part of the musical ice revue.

Chuckie once was a newsboy in Pittsburgh, the "Ice-Capades'" hometown, where he attracted the eye of Producer John H. Harris. He became a mascot for the Smokey City's Hornets of the American Hockey League and from that worked into bit parts of the "Capades." Gradually he's been promoted into fatter roles and this year finds him at the top of the list.

You'll see him cast as Dopey in "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," the ice-skating version of Walt Disney's famed film, on which its creator has collaborated for its latest reappearance. The other leads of "Snow White" are played by the troupe's youthful stars, Donna Atwood and Bobby Specht.

Others in the company include Eric Waite, the mirthful pantomimist, Larry Jackson and Bernie Lynam, comedy team, and Hugh Forgie and Stig Larson, who manage to play badminton on ice. Orrin Markhus and Irma Thomas, the Old Smoothies, offer their well-loved waltzes and young Alan Konrad moves up the rung of featured players.

Puck at American U.

PRODUCTIONS, INC., will present a subscription series of three plays at Clendenen Hall of American University beginning with a production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The Shakespearean comedy will open a week's run Monday night, January 24.

Other plays to be presented include Gertrude Stein's "Yes Is for a Very Young Man," in March, and F. Garcia Lorca's "The House of Bernarda Alba," in April.

8th Year for Bob Hope

was in the lineup for the tenth time. Bob Hope, with "Where There's Life" and "Road to Rio," was in the top rankers for the eighth year and Bogart, with "The Treasure of Sierra Madre" and "Key Largo," hit the bracket for the sixth time. Spencer Tracy, second only to Gable for his total winning years, was back in "State of the Union" and "Cass Timberlane." And after a three-year absence, Grant returned to the ten in three pictures, "The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer," "The Bishop's Wife" and "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House."

What happens to the top tenners, a decade later? Answer that one yourself. Here were the leaders in order of rank, in 1938: Shirley Temple, Clark Gable, Sonja Henie, Mickey Rooney, Spencer Tracy, Robert Taylor, Myrna Loy, Jane Withers, Alice Faye and Tyrone Power.

It's a tough business, but if you've got the stuff, you can last a long time.

'Harvey' Calls It Quits Soon

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—Two premieres and a celebrated closing are scheduled in the Broadway theaters for next week.

On Wednesday, the new play by Garson Kanin, "The Smile of the World," will bring in at the Lyceum Theater a cast headed by Ruth Gordon and Otto Kruger. The play, set in 1923, is based on a Supreme Court justice who listens to his wife's decisions.

A new musical revue, "Along Fifth Avenue," is scheduled for the Broadhurst Theater on Thursday evening with Nancy Walker and Carol Bruce in leading roles.

The closing for the week, on Saturday, January 15, is the celebrated invisible rabbit, "Harvey." It quits at the end of 1775 performances on Broadway.

Writers Spat Over State Of Red Drama

As an example, he cited the Kamerny Theater and its production of his play, "The Aristocrats."

'Esthetic Past'

IN DENOUNCING Pogodin, Fadayev said that, to the contrary, the Kamerny Theater had had its own "face." He condemned it as "bourgeois esthetic theater." Fadeyev said the Kamerny Theater could now acquire a worthwhile face of its own "if it would stand more logically on positions of Socialist realism and drop its bourgeois esthetic past, which drags behind it like a tail."

"Only a very illiterate man can suggest that the theater's movement toward Socialist realism is depriving the theater of its face," Fadeyev said. He accused Pogodin of having a "cynical attitude toward his writing comrades and toward the wonderful promoters of the realistic socialistic theater."

Fadeyev saw in Pogodin's statement "an attempt to undermine the confidence and national pride in Russian art." He accused Pogodin of being an enemy of the Communist Party's direction of Soviet art by saying:

"I want to ask if this Soviet playwright is not ashamed to repeat the most vulgar and worst calumnies against Soviet art. Such words about Soviet art are usually spoken by opponents of political trends in our art—the enemies of party direction in art and the enemies of a nation most devoted to ideals and consequently having the most free Socialist art known to the world.

Names Critics

FADEYEV observed that practically every new Soviet play is subjected to attack, ostensibly on esthetic grounds. Under the guise of esthetic criticism, he observed, there is an attempt to destroy the new trend in Soviet play writing. He named 80 critics whom he accused of such attempts and scored them for not concentrating instead of "exposing bourgeois ideology" and for "kowtowing before bourgeoise Western culture."

BALTIMORE'S QUEEN: Mae West returns to the stage of Ford's Theater, Baltimore, tomorrow night in one of the fabulous actress-author's most successful creations, "Diamond Lil." Mae wrote the play for herself 20 years ago, played it two seasons and last year revived it to become the toast of London. Now she's beginning a national tour with a cast headed by filmdom's Steve Cochran. Mae's run at Ford's is for one week only, with matinees Wednesday and Saturday

The Lunts Arrive to Start Rehearsals

Theater notes: There was not a single Broadway premier last week . . . Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne have arrived from their Wisconsin farm to begin rehearsals of their next play, S. N. Behrman's version of the Michael Achard comedy, "Speak To Me of Love." . . . "Leaf and Bough," the Joseph Hayes play which Rouben Mamoulian is directing, will have its Broadway premiere January 21.—(AP).

Koussevitsky Here Thursday

THE Boston Symphony concert Thursday night is sold out. It is a phenomenon of the musical world that wherever this orchestra goes, no matter what it plays, its concerts are sold out in advance, months in advance! For his farewell to Washington Koussevitsky lists Vivaldi, Prokofieff, Copland, and Brahms.

Koussevitsky

Howard Mitchell leads student concerts this week in three high schools. New and familiar music find place on the programs. Adults are invited to attend these programs if they want to enlarge their acquaintance with music.

Martha Graham will dance at Lisner Auditorium on February 2, under the sponsorship of the Institute of Contemporary Arts. Inquiries and ticket requests should go to the Institute. They could not choose a better artist than Miss Graham to represent the finest in contemporary creative art.

The program will be drawn from recent Graham works, including Cave of the Heart, Herodiade, Letter to the World, Errand into the Maze, Night Journey, The Strangler, or Erick Hawkins' Stephen Acrobat.

The National Symphony office announces that Heitor Villa-Lobos will conduct the orchestra on Sunday afternoon, January 30. Villa-Lobos is the most prolific of living composers with more than 1200 works to his credit. His Bachianas Brasileiras No. 5 was one of the best selling Columbia records of 1948, and his music for the Broadway show, "Magdalena," was acclaimed as one of the few redeeming features of the expensive flop.

DOROTHY Hodgkins Dorsey sends word of the first special event in her current season. Lilly Windsor, American soprano, and at 24, a star under contract to the Royal Opera of Rome, will sing in Constitution Hall on February 1. Miss Windsor is the first American to have a contract with the Rome Opera Company since Canadian-born Edward Johnson, now manager of the Met, appeared there as Eduardo di Giovanni 30 years ago.

The Columbia Opera Company will present Naughty Marietta in Lisner Auditorium January 21 and 22. Proceeds will be divided between the company's fund, and furnishings for a musician's room in George Washington Hospital.

The Ways and Means Committee, O. E. S., is again sponsoring round trip excursions to New York for performances of the Metropolitan Opera. Details are available through Miss Anna Park, chairman, at the Bellevue Hotel.—P. H.

Beethoven Concerto Done by Casadesus

BEETHOVEN: Concerto No. 4 for piano and orchestra. Robert Casadesus, with Philadelphia Orchestra, under Ormandy. Columbia 744. $5.85.

Here's that great concerto again. There are recent versions of this work by Schnabel (one under Dobrowen not yet released in this country, and one with Stock and the Chicago Symphony on Victor), and there is an older version by Gieseking. This new recording finds Casadesus not quite as relaxed in the opening as Schnabel, but playing the music with deep understanding and perfect control of tone and dynamics. The orchestra seems a bit muffled at times, but that may vary according to individual phonographs. Technically things are pretty good.

Schumann: Liederkreis. Helen Traubel, soprano with Coonrad von Bos, pianist. Columbia 752. $5.75.

Miss Traubel is not yet, and probably never will be, a genuine Lieder singer. The pity of this is that her voice is so well suited to the more refined art. She commands a floating pianissimo and excellent diction, two requisites. But her traversal of these songs, some of the most perfect from Schumann's pen, lacks any imagination or sensitivity. My reviewing set lacks sides four and seven, for which instead I received a record from a Gieseking-Debussy album. But even were the proper disk in the album, it is not likely that it would alter Traubel's beautiful sound or her unfeeling conception. The piano is consistently poorly reproduced.

DIAMOND: Romeo and Juliet. Little Symphony under Thomas K. Scherman. Also: Diamond: Overture to the Tempest. Columbia 751. $4.75.

David Diamond writes regularly, and fluently, in a variety of forms. Among his songs can be found some of the most touching and exquisite songs now being written anywhere. His abilities in instrumental works are as well grounded, though not as uniformly successful. But in his music for Romeo and Juliet he achieves a beauty no less poignant for its economy, and a new texture in music for this play. Here is no echo of Tschaikowsky, Berlioz or Prokofieff, though of the three it is closest to Berlioz.

Written in 1944 to accompany Margaret Webster's production of the Shakespeare, the music here recorded includes an overture, balcony scene, dialogue between Friar Laurence and Romeo, conversation between Juliet and the nurse, and the death scene. The album includes also an overture for the Tempest. It is a set worth owning and enjoying, even though the playing lacks refinement of sound and precision. Give this small ensemble a real conductor and things will improve beyond recognition.

Korngold: Garden Scene, from Much Ada About Nothing; also: Kroll: Banjo and Fiddle. Jascha Heifetz, violinist. Victor 12-0430. $1.25.

Kroll plays at the Library of Congress next Friday night, and knows his instrument thoroughly. His writing for it in these two encore items is skillfully reflected in Heifetz' account. The Korngold is soupy, but fun if you like your goo laid on with the usual trowel.

Speaks: On the Road to Mandalay; also; Sanderson: Until. Leonard Warren, baritone, with Willard Sektberg, pianist. Victor 10-1447. $1.

Skip it.

Granados: Intermezzo; also: Revueltas: Sensemaya. Leopold Stokowski and his orchestra. Victor 12-0470. $1.25.

This great orchestra and conductor come through with two good occasional pieces. The Revueltas was played here by the Philadelphia Orchestra two years ago. It's about snake charming, and works up a good healthy glow. Magnificent recording and playing.

Xylophone Leads Youth to Piano

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK, Dec. 18 (AP).—Pianist Byron Janis, who began his musical career on a xylophone and at 20 has just earned column-long reviews packed with praises from New York critics, was christened Janis by radio.

The first name, Byron, was his parents' choice. His father's last name is Yanks; when 10-year-old Yanks broadcast, the announcement decided he wanted something more euphonious, and on the spot he picked Janis.

But a precedent for such a change had already been set in his family. Yanks itself is a sharp abbriviation of the original Russian name, and Byron's father has five brothers who also changed to other names, every one different. Janis is the seventh different last name in the family.

BYRON JANIS
. . . he'll be here in March

Christmas Gift

THE XYLOPHONE was a Christmas gift which the youngster took to kindergarten. On it he picked out "Jingle Bells" after his teacher played the piece on the piano; then he picked it out on the piano. Shortly after, he was sent home with a note pinned to his shirt. He expected it meant a spanking, but it proved to be a recommendation that he study music seriously.

He has done little else since. He studied first with his sister's teacher; then, after a hearing from Josef Lhevinne, with Adele Marcus in New York; nowadays, for special problems, with Horowitz. He has given about 100 concerts in this country and South America, some with major orchestras. He has reversed the usual custom of a New York debut first and then barnstorming; he barnstormed first, and made his Carnegie Hall debut last month.

To be a major pianist, you practically have to have a New York apartment . . . though, of course, to get a New York apartment you practically have to be a major pianist. With the help of a number of contacts, Janis got settled more quickly than most people.

Eager-Eyed, Bouncy

A BLACK-HAIRED, eager-eyed, bouncy lad who I hope had as much fun during the interview as I had, Janis has sublet a sublet apartment. He is thus twice removed from the original occupant, a girl now in Paris where, he prays, she will stay. She had sublet to a painter and his wife, who is a pianist, Yara Bernette. When he asked his management about an apartment, he was told that Miss Bernette, who is under the same management, was giving hers up. He inspected it, liked it at once, and found furthermore that the walls were covered with pictures by one of his favorite painters, Carlos Prado, who proved to be Miss Bernette's husband.

Movie Music Makes Progress: 'Hearts & Flowers' to Debussy

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (NYHT). From "Hearts and Flowers," played by a bored pianist on a tinny nickleodeon to a complete Debussy score by a famous symphony orchestra describes the evolution of musical backgrounds in motion pictures.

The only requirements for the theater pianist's job in the early flicker days were that he could make a lot of noise and provide a tear-jerking rendition of "Hearts and Flowers" when needed.

As the movies progressed financially the more enterprising theaters installed huge organs to provide suitable melodic accompaniment to the action on the screen. These organs were equipped with snare drums, bass drums, cymbals, horns, sirens, whistles and bells and the first movie theater organists were the forerunners of the ingenious sound effects in radio today.

Enter the Cue Sheet

LATER important studios sent cue sheets into their films, which carefully explained what music must be played during the showing of the picture. The average organist would read something like this: "Door opens, revealing Nascha dead on the floor. . . . Mn. thm (main theme). "Liebstod," R. Wagner," and in most cases, promptly go into 'Hearts and Flowers.'"

Came the "talkies" in 1926 and the fingers of the theater musician were silenced. But something was missing. Hollywood took its new-found realism so seriously that music was never heard in a talking picture unless the source was visible on the screen. If the producer felt that Ingrid La Marr's final clinch needed music, he inserted such typical dialogue as: "INGRID (to ERIC): Oh, I must play you a new record I got this afternoon" before she wilted in Our Hero's arms.

This went on for six years until a young RKO producer named David O. Selznick decided to underscore his entire new movie, "Bird of Paradise," with music, especially where he felt it would heighten the dramatic effect.

He based his decision on the simple premise that the movie public had accepted musical accompaniments for years during the silent films, so why not with talkies, too.

"People will laugh," said the skeptics, "if an orchestra suddenly starts playing out in the middle of a jungle."

Asked for More

BUT people didn't laugh. They asked for more. And suddenly every studio in Hollywood was madly hiring the composers, arrangers and orchestra leaders in the top theaters throughout the country. Musical scores of pictures became as important as the scripts in many instances.

By 1939 Hollywood typically forgot that music was most effective when used as a simple auxiliary to the action on the screen and its outlandish use of musical backgrounds received much criticism.

And Now Debussy

IN 1943 Selznick took another step forward by releasing specially recorded transcriptions of musical comedy scores in his pictures to radio stations at his own expense so that the public could enjoy motion-picture music as an art form in its own right. A few years later the music from his film, "Duel In the Sun," was the first score to be released by Victor Red Seal records with a performance by a major symphony orchestra.

Selznick's latest innovation in motion-picture music is to be found in his production, "Portrait of Jennie," costarring Jennifer Jones and Joseph Cotten, which will be shown in New York next month.

Because of the ethereal aspect of the story, Selznick decided to score "Portrait of Jennie" solely with the music of one of the French masters, Claude Debussy. Some films have been made using portions of works from famous composers but none has ever been released with a score based on the works of one master of Debussy's stature.

Debussy's estate relaxed an iron rule concerning the music by the late composer for its use in motion pictures. The music was scored with Dimitri Tiomkin a 74-piece symphony orchestra, in addition to a choral group.

Menuhin Film Is Called Music for Music's Sake

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—Violinist Yehudi Menuhin, who for years has taken motion pictures as a hobby, has gone into the film business in earnest. His first production carefully avoids being, as he puts it, "a fantastic, stupendous, enormous, prodigious, colossal Hollywood project."

"Hollywood has not provided so far for any outlet" for straight music, he says. When singers or players are called to the studios, their work is only part of the film story; they have to be actors as much as musicians, and music is subordinated to the plot.

Pure music, not fussed up with costume, scenery and love story, and not accompanied by remarks about its meaning or any moral at all, in other words just plain music as it reaches audiences in the world's big concert halls, is the subject of the first film.

Since it had to have a title, it was called "Concert Magic." It plays for 75 minutes, with Antal Dorati conducting the Hollywood Symphony, Menuhin at the violin, Jakob Gimpel at the piano and Eula Beal singing. Bach, Beethoven, Sarasate are among the names on the first program, and a second is almost ready for distribution. The camera and sound track give just what you would see and hear from the best seats in the concert hall; occasionally, however, there is a close-up to show the performer's fingers on violin or piano.

Menuhin and Producer Paul Gordon of Concert Films planned the venture, and the first program was made a year ago. It has been used with great success, it is said, at Stanford University, and has been released in South Africa. The promoters estimate there are several hundred neighborhood and "art" theaters in this country with a clientele that would like such a program, and the National Concerts Association is interested.

Menuhin does not expect any run-way business, but he believes there is a sizable audience for music as music, particularly in smaller cities and towns which big name artists and large orchestras do not visit.

He sees it as "a completely new field, offering no competition to radio, films or concert managements." And he finds the sound reproduction "excellent."

Melchior in Music Post

GLENWAY WESCOTT has been named representative of the National Institute of Arts and Letters to the National Commission of UNESCO . . . Lauritz Melchior is the new advisory committee chairman of the International Music Relations Committee, a division of the National Federation of Music Clubs . . . Smith and Mount Holyoke colleges are jointly sponsoring the Valley Music Press . . . The 101-year-old College of the City of New York has established the City College Press; a history of the college and textbooks are the first scheduled publications . . . In February, NBC's University of the Air will start a music course under the direction of the University of Southern California music department; there will be weekly study guides, a handbook, and assigned "homework" . . . According to the National Music Council, the major orchestras in this country in the 1947-48 season played 1601 compositions by foreign-born composers, 166 by American-born, and 137 by composers naturalized or living in the United States.

How You Can Gain Support For the National Symphony

orchestra's conductors, and with its management. Some of this season's conductors were engaged with the understanding that their repertoire would stay within certain prescribed bounds. These bounds were set by the hiring management.

Fassett deserves great credit for his job, carried on in the face of serious difficulties. When CBS's great Invitation to Music series was discontinued some time ago, did you, the listeners to good music, flood his office with letters of hope and courage for the future, and for the reinstatement of the program? You did not. The total number of letters of protest was so small you would not believe it. I could print it with less than two figures.

Simply Write

MORE mail has come to this desk since our recent artical on the poor state of music on the air than on any subject we have discussed in weeks. Miss M. H. C. of F st. in Washington wants to know how the public "can impress on broadcasting companies that they want it changed." The answer is, as always, "write, write, write, and write again." Only public opinion in the form of letters and cards to sponsors, but more important to broadcasters themselves, will bring more good music to the air.

By now the sad New Year's Day occurrence is widely known, but how many of you offered any protest other than verbal imprecations to your friends? The NBC Symphony was eliminated from the day's programs, to be heard next week, and the Metropolitan Opera, also considered sacrosanct, was recorded and heard the next day, when many of its regular listeners could not arrange to hear it. Did you write?

Do you encourage your local stations which play and broadcast good music—WCFM, WQQW, WMAL, WTOP, WRC—do you let them know how much you like the good music on their stations—do you tell the sponsors?

Strictly Frank

THE FRANKNESS of this card delighted my heart—perhaps it will amuse you too:

"Dear Paul Hume—there have been times, admittedly infrequent, when I would have gladly spit in your eye—but this is not one of them. Your review of the ——— was" (and then she becomes generous). And it's signed.

And a generous letter from G. T. in Alexandria concludes with a paragraph which should be echoed throughout the greater Washington community: "How can we go about whipping up real spirited support for the National Symphony now? A group to which I belong is going to take out a group membership in the association, and I am going to get season's subscriptions for me and my wife. I'm awfully anxious that it be made clear that we Washington music lovers have been waiting to take the orchestra to our hearts. Have you any suggestions that wouldn't cost too much money?"

The two things suggested in the letter are two I would suggest: membership in the association, and season subscriptions. The other two would be to make the largest possible contribution you can in the forthcoming financial campaign, and to work from door to door in your community, so that all who are interested and able may do the same thing.

And finally, since the letter comes from Alexandria, where the orchestra has not, to my knowledge, played—how about organizing a series of three or four concerts in Alexandria, in connection with that city's coming centennial celebrations—a series either for adults, or for the school children of Alexandria—paid for by community subscription?

And two related letters: "I think they (the Philadelphia Orchestra) waste the time of good musicians and the good audiences at Constitution Hall playing music the cat dragged in by stumbling over the keys."

From Eugene Ormandy, "I have programmed the Bruckner 7th Symphony for the March 8 concert in Washington." The way to get places in music, over the air, in live concerts, and other places, is to write letters to those who care and can do something about it."

Artist' Cooperative Elects New Officers

At the December meeting of the Artists Cooperative, Jozef Pielage was elected president. The Cooperative is one of Washington's younger art organizations, with a membership that includes both established and inexperienced artists. Without headquarters of its own at present, the group has just shown at the United Nations Club and is planning other shows in local galleries during the season.

Washington friends of the painter, Alexander Russo, who was here during the war, will be interested in his appointment as instructor at the New Orleans Academy of Art in Louisiana.

An exhibition of paintings of theological subjects by Joan Morris will be held in the Salve Regina Building of Catholic University from January 9 to 25, from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. daily, and Sundays from 2 to 6 p. m. The painter has been active in various phases of activity associated with her specialty, sacred art. She has held exhibitions in London, Paris, Milan, and Buenos Aires. In 1947 she went on a lecture tour in this country.

"The Return of the Prodigal Son," a canvas by the Spanish painter, Murillo, has been given to the National Gallery by the Avalon Foundation, through the generosity of Mrs. Ailsa Mellon Bruce, daughter of the gallery's founder. According to John Walker, chief curator, it belongs to a series of paintings made for the chapel of the Hospital of Saint George in Seville.

The exhibition, "Beginnings and Directions," to be held jointly by the Whyte Gallery and the Watkins Gallery of American University, will open in the two galleries simultaneously on Friday, January 15. It will remain on view through February 5. Two works by each artist will be exhibited, one of the present and one of a decade ago.

Make Way for the Amateurs

has been transcribing it from the network and playing it back at 11:05. It's a documentary series written by Lou Hazam of Silver Spring, who is NBC's chief in charge of sugarcoating physical and social sciences. Today's show will be "An Investigation Into Congressional Investigations."

Ed Tomlinson of NBC is now heard at 2:30 on Saturdays from South America . . . WNBW's "Write Now" show on graphology has been moved again. It's scheduled for 7:15 on Friday nights . . . Teleguide, the local TV publication, is busy gathering votes on the best this, that and whatsis in local TV Ballots will be in the January 17 issue.

THE advance force of "The Original Amateur Hour" beat the local bushes and flushed some likely birds—including turkeys—for this Wednesday night's show which will originate from Constitution Hall.

This revamped version of the old "Major Bowes' Amateur Hour" which has been heard on WMAL-ABC Wednesdays at 8 p. m. since September, salutes a different city each week, using at least one aspiring amateur from that city. (Next Sunday at 7 p. m., Washington gets the hail and felicitations from the video show on WTTG—DuMont.)

Besides the hour-long radio show Wednesday, there will be an aftershow lasting about an hour and a half. The whole thing can be viewed for 90 cents to $2.40.

A share of the proceeds goes to the National Symphony Orchestra Association, which (of all people!) is cosponsoring the show with the Greater National Capital Committee and the Washington Board of Trade. Tickets are available at Kitt's Music Store, 1330 G st. nw.

Surprisingly, in this large and cosmopolitan city, the turnout for the auditions was small and largely untalented (and mostly vocal).

If people stayed away in droves because rewards seem small (winners get paid in applause and opportunity primarily), it is understandable. If they stayed away because they remembered how Major Bowes in days of yore would bong the gong on the bad acts (presumably psychopaths who had been forewarned and wanted to chance it anyway) and otherwise handle them like cattle up for auction, they stayed away unnecessarily Not only does the current emcee (Ted Mack, who used to be on the major's staff) skip the gong routine, the advance men who conduct the preliminaries are models of tact and kindliness.

It is inevitable that one out of every 20 performers will turn out to be a wild-eyed tone-deaf candidate for Bedlam. Yet Bob Maurer of the program's staff and Gil Hodges of WMAL's program department, who assisted him, heard each performer through to the bitter end and sent each one off with the same soothing phrase, "If we can use you on the program, we will contact you through the telephone number on your application blank."

Maurer figures that whatever false hope is engendered in some hearts is compensated for by the amount of embarrassment it saves those who don't qualify.

Maurer is able to manage a pleasant expression for each performer as he comes in and also manages to keep a straight face as the performer bleats his heart out. This latter is no easy trick. Even the best intentioned of the station's personnel and this segment of the local press had occasionally to retire to hidden corners of the control room to hide our laughter. Maurer, obliged to stay visible behind the glass panel, dimpled only once and promptly bowed his head in what the contestant undoubtedly thought was deep contemplation.

They Hold Everything

EQUALLY difficult, I should think, is the way both Maurer and Hodges kept their temper with some of the exasperating contestants. While dozens of people waited to be auditioned each night, some contestants would arrive in the studio without music, with music in the wrong key, or with no idea of what they planned to do.

They would often ask the accompanist to transpose music at sight, and sometimes got temperamental if he didn't know instantly how they wanted that "da, da, da, part at the end" to be played.

Fully half of them looked bewildered and alarmed if asked what other numbers they could perform, and usually were entirely unprepared to give a second sample.

Maurer makes every effort to bring out the best in the people, being as anxious as they are for everything to come out right. He actually wheedles them to try another song if the first one was beyond the scope of their voices or unsuited to the program's needs.

From the sometimes painful, sometimes pleasant hours of auditioning, Maurer comes up with several suggestions which would seem elementary but clearly are not: Choose material that is within range of your talents, be thoroughly prepared (words and music) on at least one selection, be ready to offer an alternate selection of a different type if you get a chance to perform twice.

From watching the proceedings I'd add this advice for future auditioners. Listen to the program at least once to get some idea of the type of acts used. If the show does not use operatic arias, a second Lily Pons will not impress them. If the show does not use dramatic readings, why sit around all evening waiting for a chance to offer one?

Try to have a novel act. Usually there will be five people who sing "Begin the Beguine" with equal finesse. But a man with a Russian accent who can sing Russian folk songs! (It is all too true and all too sad to note that an Italian girl and a native-born Russian tenor had to be cajoled into singing native songs which they did with considerable charm, although they sang American pop tunes with even less ability than is par for the course.)

You will also do yourself more good by trying parts of several different selections than yammering on and on and on about "One Night of Love."

Big New Video Frolic Starts on January 28

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—Plans are announced for perhaps the most ambitious television program to date—a weekly one hour musical revue to be seen in 30 cities.

The program, costing $30,000 or more a week in time and talent, will be known as "Friday Night Frolic" and will make its premiere January 28 at 8 p. m., EST. It will be telecast over the combined East and Midwest television networks of both DuMont and NBC. In cities with both NBC and DuMont stations, it will be shown over both simultaneously. The Admiral Corp. of Chicago, radio and television manufacturer, will be the sponsor.

For the first two weeks, the show will be seen over 24 stations in 16 cities having network connections. Then, by means of film recordings, it will be extended to 14 additional cities to cover every area in the country with television facilities.

The cast will be headed by comedian Sid Caesar and will include Mary McCarty, Imogene Coca and the dance team of Gower and Champion.

The Columbia Broadcasting System announced it would start a new one hour weekly program starring Arthur Godfrey on Wednesday, January 12, to be seen over 10 East Coast and Midwest stations. It will be sponsored by Chesterfield cigarettes. No cost figures were given but talent expense will be comparable to the $7000 a week Toast of the Town shown on CBS television.

'I Can Hear It Now'

Today from 4 to 5 p. m., WWDC and WWDC-FM will broadcast the complete "I Can Hear It Now" album. This is the Ed Murrow production featuring the voices of the history of the past 15 years. President Roosevelt, Wendell Willkie, Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, the funeral of Roosevelt described by Arthur Godfrey, the crash of the Hindenberg, all are on these records.

ABC Uses New Technique

Several programs are presented simultaneously on radio and television and some are presented separately in different versions, but ABC's forum program, "On Trial," uses a still different technique. It is presented on television each Monday at 8 p. m. (EST) and a recording of the sound portion is broadcast by radio at 10:30 p. m.

Unlike the straight forum, the program is conducted as a court trial, with "expert witnesses" being questioned by opposing attorneys on major public issues. David Levitan, member of the public law and government department of Columbia University, acts as producer.

Levitan says the half-hour time limit of the program is a handicap in that it often keeps the attorneys from really getting warmed up. But the time limitation has the distinctive advantage, he adds, of preventing participants from branching off on unrelated subjects, and keeps the discussions in sharp focus.—(AP).

New Series on WWDC

Designed to remind Americans that prejudice and discrimination have no place in our democracy, a new series of programs will start on WWDC and WWDC-FM beginning Monday, at 10:45 p. m. The series, produced by the Institute for Democratic Education, will present such stars as Melvyn Douglas, Ralph Bellamy, Raymond Massey and Vera Zorina in stories from Colliers, Atlantic Monthly, Readers Digest, the New Yorker and other magazines.

First in the series, called "Stories to Remember," will be Geraldine Fitzgerald in "The Lesson," the story of a child's first day in school. It first appeared in Mademoiselle. The programs will run for 13 weeks.

Winchell Gets a Raise

Walter Winchell, who wasn't exactly working for peanuts before on his $7500 a week ABC radio program for Jergens, got a hefty pay raise when he changed to the sponsorship of Kaiser-Frazer. Trade circles hear Winchell gets $12,000 a week or better under his new contract.

'Counter-Spy' Gets a Sponsor

The Sunday night ABC show "Counter-Spy" has been taken over by a sponsor (Pepsi-Cola). Starting January it will be heard twice a week—Tuesdays and Thursdays at 7:30 p. m., EST. It's a nice business plum for the network, involving some $1,800,000 a year for the sale of time alone.

At the Bridge Table

Virginia Tourney Starts This Week

By Marian H. Barre

DURING the coming weekend, duplicate bridge games of Greater Washington will be temporarily suspended as regular patrons gather at the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria for the annual Northern Virginia Tournament. Friday afternoon, leading women's pairs will attempt to upset the defending couple of Misses F. L. Chapman and H. E. Whitaker. On Friday evening, Mrs. William M. McIntyre and Leroy Thurtell are expected to defend their mixed pair title.

Baltimoreans Margaret Hamilton and Arthur Schlesinger will take on all comers in the open pair two-session event on Saturday and on Sunday the team of the McGhees, William Million, J. P. Willis and J. T. McDermott will defend its title in a two-session game.

The only other master point events scheduled for the week will be at the Count Club, 1614 17th st. nw., on Tuesday evening, while on the same evening the Chess Club will complete the final session of its open pair championship.

AS A RESULT of the Washington Bridge League's final game of 1948, Dr. Steinberg became the undisputed winner of the fall series high individual average for players with more than 30 master points, with Mr. and Mrs. J. R. McGhee, jr., ranking next. In the category of players with less than 30 master points, John Lutrell commanded first position, followed by Dr. E. M. Short and Ralph Spritzer. Leading in the fall team series was the team of Cotter, Karpin, Murray, White and Spritzer, followed by the team of Boyd, Dickerman, Mrs. McGhee and Roberts. Pair game winners of December 29 were: Mrs. Edna Evans and J. Gerber north-south, with Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson east-west; runners-up were: Maj. R. Skinner, Rudy Ashton, W. Ashby and G. Arkoyan. In the team play, the team of Miller Roberts, Mrs. J. R. McGhee, jr., J. Boyd and George Dickerman was first.

Master point winners at the Federal Bridge League on December 27 were: North-south, tie between Mrs. Mary Goodstein and Mrs. Thelma Surkin with Louis Tubbs and Lloyd Tubbs for first; east-west, J. G. Stone and David Murray; half master points went to Drs. McHugh and Gorton east-west.

The first master point game of the new year was held at the Euclid Studios on New Year's Day, making Charles Lyons' total one master point greater and producing a new junior master for the bridge world as Bob Houtz captured his first full master point. Houtz and Lyons beat out the seasoned team of J. G. Stone and Ralph Spritzer by only a few points, with Mrs. Dixie Wright and Laura Hunter, third.

AT THE annual business meeting of the Federal Bridge League, the following officers were elected for 1949: President, Maj. R. H. Skinner; vice president, Mrs. William F. Stevenson; secretary, Miss Laura Hunter; treasurer, Eric Morgan; game director, Paul Golden; board of directors, Dr. Emily Grewe, Royal C. Kiser, George L. Kathan, retiring president, and Col. Henry A. Walker.

The final game of the fall team of four series at the Federal produced prize winners as follows: Section A, "Cascades" (Skinner, Stone, Roberts, Dickerman); second, "Four Roses" (the Kathans, Young, Fletcher). Section B, "Allies" (Hodgkins, Mathews, Higgins, Graham) with a tie for second place between the "Owls" (Walker, Scruggs, Grewe, Richter) and "G. M.'s" (Grant, Morgan, McConchie, Perkins).

Team of four play will begin its next session on January 17, with a pair game scheduled for tomorrow. A handicap system of rating will be adopted to equalize the strength and experience of teams. Handicaps will be assigned and modified during the preliminary games before the playoff, dependent upon the number of wins each team scores.

Since the league recently changed its bylaws to allow membership to persons not Federal employes, but who are recommended by a qualified member, it is expected that the coming season will see one of the biggest turnouts in the Federal's team play history. New teams desiring to register may call either Paul Golden (Co. 5336), Miller & Roberts (Fr. 5142) or Jim Stone (Ad. 7385).

No Threat to Stamps Seen in Postal Meter

By William M. Stuart

THE mechanization of the postal system is growing. When the meter system was first inaugurated, there were stamp collectors rather dubious over the future of the postage stamp, many really believing meters would eventually be used exclusively for all rates of postage. The metered parcel post service has now been established in many cities, with additions looked for in the future. At present 801 cities use the meter system, including 2036 individual postoffice installations.

The metered mail system was originated 28 years ago by the Pitney-Bowes Co. of Stamford, Conn. In 1947 postage revenue collected by meters amounted to three million dollars—more than one fourth postal revenue collected in the whole United States. While the meter system is used in many postoffices, the latest parcel post service provides major savings to the postoffice as well as postal patrons. Metered parcels require no canceling or postmarking, therefore are more quickly sorted for early train dispatch.

However, while meters may be the means of quicker mail delivery, there appears to be no danger of the postage stamp being abolished.

THE new 4-cent air mail postal card will be released through the Washington postoffice tomorrow. The card is the regular postal card size with the 4-cent stamp arranged horizontally in the upper right hand corner, the design is that of an eagle in flight with outstretched wings. The stamp is red on a cream colored card. The Government Printing Office printed the card, 12 million being ordered. The Washington postoffice will cancel not more than five cards to a person. The Philatelic Agency will not sell the new card.

The Capital City Post Card Collectors Club held its eighteenth meeting on Monday evening at the Thomson School, corner of 12th and L sts. nw. The club now has 26 members. All interested in post cards are invited to join. Miss Virginia Brown, 215 Avenue F, District Heights, Washington 10, D. C., is secretary of the club.

The Woodridge Stamp Club held its first meeting of the year on Monday night at 1818 Rhode Island ave. ne., the Recreation Room. The next meeting will be on Monday evening, January 17.

Ellsworth Rue, an old-time philatelist, was the speaker at the Friendship Stamp Club on Wednesday evening, A. W. Oliphant, jr., presiding. The meeting was held at the Eldbrooke Methodist Church, Wisconsin ave. and River rd. nw.

At the Collectors Club, Branch 5, SPA, Tuesday evening an auction was held, Ellery Denison officiating as auctioneer. The Bourse showed unusual signs of life and Manager Galloway was on hand to supply members with the first installment of the new 1949 circuit books. A regular meeting will be held Tuesday at Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw. It is planned to hold a special program on January 18, the new 6-cent air mail stamp being released that day. Air mail collectors are especially invited.

HIGHWAY Postoffice Service will be inaugurated on January 27 between the following points: Burlington, Vt., to Albany, N. Y.; Rutland, Vt., to Albany, N. Y.; Richmond, Ky., to Louisville, Ky.; Louisville, Ky.; to Somerset, Ky.; Greensboro to Boone, N. C., and Greensboro to Warsaw, N. C. Special first trip cachets and cancellations will be provided for each of the routes, the usual rules applying. No point-to-point covers will be recognized. Covers must be in the hands of postmasters by January 25. In all instances Trip No. 1 will be between the first and last named city on each route and Trip No. 2 between the last and first named city.

Philatelic service and a special cachet will be provided for covers carried by the first flight to Basrah, Iraq, on F A M 18, by Pan American Airways, Inc., on January 20. The air mail rate is 25 cents a half ounce, or 10 cents air letters sheets. Covers will be flown from New York and Boston.

'Tantalizing Mirage' for Washington

A. U. Plans a Fine Arts Center

By Jane Watson Crane

THE architectural plans of Charles M. Goodman for development of a fine arts center at American University would offer a dazzling prospect for any community. For Washington, where facilities of this nature are virtually nonexistent, the proposal appears like a tantalizing mirage.

Realization, in such a plant as the one proposed, of a combination workshop, teaching, and exhibition center, would offer a stimulus for similar efforts throughout the country.

The ideas embodied in the project are not new on paper, but they are still new and rare in practice. Many universities in this country have no adequate facilities for holding exhibitions; in fact, some have only the meagerest facilities for presenting visual material of any sort. For some reason, in the tradition of art education, the study of art is often far removed from the practice.

'Artist-in-Residence'

IN THE American University plan, living accommodations are provided for an "artist-in-residence" within the center; also there are proposed and provided for, a number of separate studios for faculty members or other practicing artists. The artist-in-residence idea, perhaps most spectacularly embodied by Orozco at Dartmouth but brought closer to home by individuals like the late John Steuart Curry, who spent several years at the University of Wisconsin, is one that can be a benefit or a detriment, depending on the celebrity picked. Its development is not hazard, for the artist-in-residence has been sponsored and supported by a responsible foundation.

In addition to the advantage of being able to offer a continuing program of original study material on the spot, a campus art gallery can be a laboratory for experiment in the techniques of visual presentation and other phases of handling and management.

In Washington, where the National Gallery and other institutions are rich in works of the past, it is natural and logical that American University should propose to emphasize the work of the living.

The projected new center will give a magnificent impetus to what in effect has already begun. The university has made a start on an art collection, with donations by artists in memory of the late C. Law Watkins, former head of the art department, and with purchases from the slender funds now available. The present physical plant is small, but within the limits of its capacities offers good space for display. Existing facilities allow for a few separate studios. The university has already pioneered in programs aimed to relate the arts to each other, and presumably the new center, with auditorium, lecture rooms, and the like, will merely make this easier.

Location a Handicap

FROM a community point of view, the major handicap is the location, which is a distance from the heart of the city. But by the time the new buildings at American University become a reality, the city will probably have spread out a good way in their direction.

Pereira's Work Demonstrates a Real Skill

I. RICE PEREIRA'S smartly turned out experiments with material and space relations will continue on view through January at the Barnett-Aden Gallery. Her work has a geometric precision not usually associated with her sex. Still young, she has made phenomenal technical progress since she showed here almost a decade ago. The works of that period displayed are evidence. There is no semblance or pretense of emotional feelings in her work. No matter how far afield she goes in search of new material, she invariably uses it with skill in a tightly integrated composition. The solutions seem almost too pat, but there is no doubt of the abilities of the hands and head which direct them.

Ben-Zion, well-known New York painter, will lecture at the Washington Workshop, 2020 Massachusetts ave. nw., at 8:30 p. m. next Friday. His topic will be "The Artist and the Spectator." Ben-Zion, born in the Ukraine, and living in the United States since 1920, has been painting since 1932. Since his first exhibition at the Willard Gallery some years ago he has won Nation-wide recognition. Visitors to the last Corcoran biennial will recall his big painting, "Thistles." The Workshop plans to bring a one-man show of Ben-Zion's work to Washington in April. He has been painting a number of Biblical themes, for which he is perhaps best known.

Theodora Kane will have an exhibit of paintings at the District of Columbia Branch of the National League of American Pen Women, of which she is a newly elected member, through January 20.

First 1949 exhibition at the United Nations Club, which is launching a new program under the direction of Agnes De Lano, is a one-man show of paintings by Phillip Bell, a Washington artist.

U. S. Paintings At Corcoran

ELEANOR SWENSON, associate curator of the Corcoran Gallery, has assembled a first-rate loan exhibition of American paintings from 1830 to 1930 to illustrate her theme, "De Gustibus; a Century of Taste and Criticism."

Museums in various parts of the country have been generous in lending works, such as William Morris Hunt's "The Bathers" and George Caleb Bingham's "Raftsmen Playing Cards," which are widely known through reproduction and mark peak achievements in American art. Visitors will find many old favorites in the assemblage.

The show, which is the result of considerable study and preparation, will continue on view through February 4.

The Headmaster

Engineers Of Haifa Go to War

By Fred M. Hechinger

THE twenty-first class of Haifa's Hebrew Institute of Technology, the Technion, missed its graduation. This is as total a mobilization as any country has ever offered for its defense, and the college closed its doors to students. Its halls remain open only for special work conducted by members of the armed forces.

But the Technion has given Israel more than 1000 graduate engineers since its foundation in 1925. Its first class consisted of 23 students; its last pre-war enrollment came up to almost 700. To those who doubt that West Point's basic emphasis on engineering has been wise, it may be interesting to know that a very high number of leading Israeli army positions are filled with officers who have studied at the Technion.

All war aside, however, it was news to me to find a first-class engineering college in Haifa. In fact, there seems to be little doubt that the Technion is the leading institute of technology in the Middle East. Once peace is re-established it has every right to expect to be the M. I. T. of that area.

Special Advantage

SITUATED on an impressive campus in the center of Haifa, the college has the special advantage of harboring a technical high school and a nautical high school on its grounds. Sharing the workshops with those institutions has permitted an expansion of facilities far beyond the size and means of similar institutions.

At the same time the most capable students of the technical school are taken into the Technion as a matter of course. The selection, however, is based on rigid academic requirements. Dr. S. Kaplansky, soft-spoken president of Technion, says emphatically: "We want our high school boys to consider their education as something more than a lobby to the university."

Although the advancement of education was undoubtedly one of the tasks of mandatory government, the Technion was built and carried on in spite, not because, of the British authorities. On frequent occasions the British withheld their support "because there was no Arab equivalent" of the institute. Said one leading Jewish educator with a completely straight face: "Since we couldn't help the British build an Arab college, we had to get help elsewhere."

Help From U. S.

MUCH of that help has come from the United States. While 35 per cent of present needs are covered by tuition fees and 10 per cent through the income from the production in the workshops, the remainder must be furnished through endowment funds.

In 1944 the American friends of the institute decided to perpetuate the name of Brig. F. H. Kisch by establishing a fund from which new laboratories would be built and the old facilities modernized.

The story of Brigadier Kisch is one of many which highlight the futility of the present British stand on Israel. Kisch, a confirmed Jew and Zionist, was political chief of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, a trustee of the Technion and—chief engineer of Montgomery's famous Eighth Army. He was a professional soldier, trained at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, England. He's a patriotic Englishman, he served the empire whenever he was called to duty.

In the last war Brigadier Kisch was in charge of the fortifications from Sousse to El Alamein. On April 7, 1943, while leading a group of Jewish engineers, he was killed in action in Tunisia.

When the Kisch Memorial Fund got under way Prof. Albert Einstein as the committee chairman cabled to Field Marshal Sir Bernard Montgomery to accept honorary chairmanship. From Algiers came Monty's message: " . . . Accept . . . No soldier in this army served more faithfully and gallantly . . . "

Dr. Chaim Weizmann, now Israel's first President, added in tribute: " . . . he proved that one can be an excellent Zionist and a good, patriotic Englishman, and thus, I hope, silenced those who still talk about 'divided loyalties' . . . "

Path of Bitterness

THE bitterness of the present conflict has led a long way from those realizations; but the visitor to the Technion senses at once that the academic bonds of the institute with Britain and with the rest of the scientific world have not been severed.

At present the Technion consists of departments of civil engineering, agriculture, industrial engineering and chemical engineering; but Dr. Kaplansky has already worked out plans for the post-war establishment of a school of aeronautics and of administration.

With the expansion of the Israeli merchant marine the nautical high school may have to enlarge its present plant. But even today more than 100 of its graduates are officers in the various naval services of the new state.

Dr. Kaplansky's only regret is that a four-year course at the Technion has made it necessary to cut "general education" to a minimum and to spend the bulk of the student's time on professional training. Until sweeping educational changes can be made, therefore, the preparatory schools will have to carry the burden of providing all-around instruction. I thought I was listening to an American college president when Dr. Kaplansky said, a trifle sadly: "Our civilization is too highly specialized, and our students no longer have the time to get universal education after their school years."

Factor in Defense

TODAY, however, the Technion cannot afford to play with academic theory. While its students are actively engaged in the war, the institute is an important factor in the defense effort.

As I walked through its corridors I found the lecture halls and the conference rooms locked and deserted, the only remaining life was in the laboratories and in the workshops, and there the khaki uniform of the army and of military technicians had taken over.

Fortunately this stoppage is only temporary. The remaining faculty members are beginning to look forward to renewed life. They quote Professor Einstein who sent this message: "In my judgment this institution is of prime importance to the development of industries and every kind of practical work in Palestine. Hence the settlement of great numbers of Jews who will seek a haven in that country . . . depends to a large extent on the proper functioning and further expansion of the Technion."

Insurance Sales Training

Evanston, Ill., Jan. 8.—College men shun insurance careers chiefly because "there is a widespread feeling that the life insurance salesman is underpaid and that insurance sales is a difficult field in which to get started," according to Frank S. Endicott, associate professor of education and director of Northwestern University's bureau of placement. "This attitude," he said, "was revealed in a survey made by the Northwestern School of Commerce of more than 500 undergraduate men, only 5 per cent of whom indicated that they were interested in selling life insurance after graduation." Because insurance is one of the Nation's largest businesses, he pointed out, it is important that "life insurance companies find means of presenting to the public generally, and to the high school and college student specifically, the modern approach to the selection and training of life insurance salesmen."

Columbia to Poll Colleges

More than 750 liberal arts colleges will soon be polled by the Columbia University Liaison Office with the United Nations to evaluate current trends in international affairs studies throughout the country. The questionnaire will include queries as to the number and type of courses on the United Nations and its special agencies, on other international organizations, American foreign policy and diplomacy that have been conducted throughout the United States during the 1948-'49 academic year or will be conducted this summer. The results of the survey will be compiled in a master list to be distributed by Columbia University to interested persons and agencies.

Chain Reaction's the Idea

Central Teen-agers Take Up 'the Bomb'

By Elsie Carper

A GROUP of students at Central High School are taking pretty seriously their role as citizens in an atomic age.

The teen-agers are proceeding under the theory that a little atomic energy information may act like a chain reaction—spreading interest in the atom to what they regard as an apathetic public.

The students are participating in a Nation-wide atomic awareness program sponsored by the National Association of Secondary School Principals. Theme of the program is "Operation: Atomic Vision."

The idea is that students of chemistry and physics should pass along their knowledge of atomic energy to other students in their own school and then to the community.

Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

Lucky or Last?

ALTHOUGH they are science students, the youngsters at Central are interested in more than fission, critical mass or Einstein's mass-energy formula.

They are concerned with the sociological questions raised by harnessing of atomic energy—its menace in wartime and the potentialities of its peacetime use.

They are facing up to question posed by the school principals:

"Will you be the lucky generation or the last one?"

The Chemistry 1 students recently took over the assembly program at Central to give their views on what lies ahead in the age of the atom.

A week preceding the assembly an exhibit of posters, charts, apparatus and models explaining atomic energy was on view in the main school corridor. A special shelf for atomic energy scrapbooks compiled by the students and pamphlets from the Atomic Energy Commission was set up in the library. A film "Atomic Energy" was shown in connection with the assembly.

Students who took part in the forum discussion at the assembly explained in general terms the chemistry of atomic fission. Then they branched over into a discussion of what would happen if an atomic bomb hit Washington.

Chemistry student Wilbur Blechman described the death and property damage that would take place within a 12 mile radius of the target of a single bomb.

Ruefully the students admitted there is no defense short of going underground to "spend the rest of your life like a mole."

"I'm beginning to wish atomic energy had never been discovered. I'd feel so much safer," said Robert Riggs.

The case for atomic energy in peace was presented by Phyllis Gelbard:

Heat and light for an entire community, cities of parks and playgrounds for hours of leisure, new fabrics, building materials, trains, ships, airplanes and cars produced cheaply with atomic energy, new ways of combatting disease.

Summing up the discussion, forum leader Charles Davis said:

"We can destroy ourselves and the rest of civilization, or we can live in a world that is healthy and happy.

"The future, today, is in the hands of high ranking Army officials and men of our Government. It may some day be up to you to decide just what to do with this new force.

"The first step is to become informed."

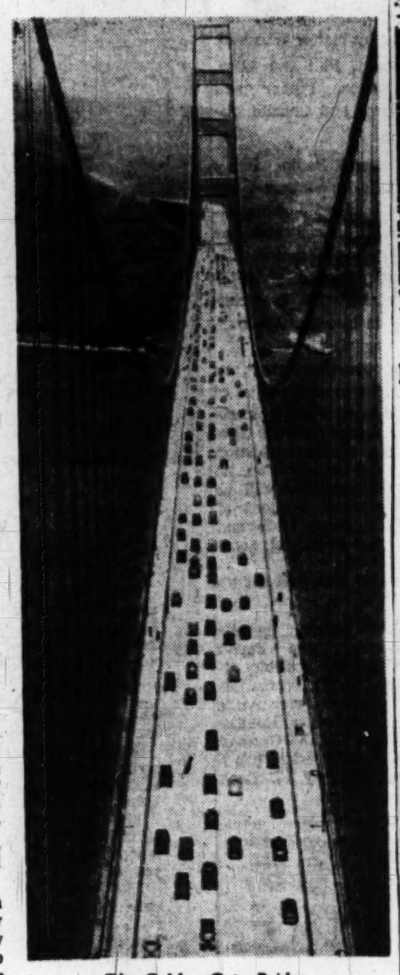
'Miami Beach' Is NOT Miami

By Orval Hopkins

NEWS RELEASES from Miami Beach these days are closing with the chill legend: "Miami Beach is NOT Miami." I think I know what Miami Beach is getting at (and I'm sure Miami does, too), but it seems to me MB has got itself into a technical morass which if carried to its logical end would become a very dreary business. For if Miami Beach is not Miami, it must also be not Fort Lauderdale, not Hollywood, not Orlando, not Tampa, not, indeed, all the other places in Florida. Similarly, Miami Beach must be not Greenpoint, N. Y., not Ludington, Mich., and not Alamogordo, N. Mex. Once you get started on this business of not being someplace else, it's very hard to stop. I'd drop the whole thing if I were you, Miami Beach.



The Golden Gate Bridge

THIS DEPARTMENT last week used a picture from the TWA 1949 calendar purporting to show the Golden Gate Bridge and California street in San Francisco. We said we didn't believe you could see the GG bridge from California st., and a couple of tolerant souls have written in both to corroborate us and to make the artist, Rex Werner, feel good. Mrs. V. McIntosh-Lane of the Wyoming here writes: "I think you are correct and that the Golden Gate Bridge cannot be seen from a vista down California st., but it is a lovely view and it's a case of 'artistic' instead of 'poetic' license." B. F. Henry, a newspaper guy who works here a couple of decks below, breathlessly calls the great town the "Paris of the Pacific" and says, "That's the Golden Gate Bridge in the picture, all right. That hill is the Marin County heights above Sausolito. But, of course, you can't see the Golden Gate Bridge by looking down California st., or any other street that has a cable car line." Anyway, here's a picture of the big swing, so you'll know it.

Meanwhile, Tom Bell of TWA has written in viz: "Many thanks for the excellent play you gave to our Rex Werner and his new calendar. My only concern now is trying to fulfill the many requests for the calendar that have come to my desk. Since your story appeared, I have received 41 postcard and letter requests, to say nothing of at least 50 telephone requests, including one yesterday from a woman in Roanoke! I'm hoping the supply holds out." Shucks, Tom. It wasn't nothin'.

POLLY NOYES reports that with 11 Governors and 3 Governors-elect on the premises for a Southern Governors' conference, Manager J. B. Temple of the General Oglethorpe Hotel in Savannah, Ga., solved a question of diplomacy neatly by instructing the boys in the dining room to address all male guests as "governor." Governors were happy at being recognized, non-governors felt flattered at being mistaken for same, and tips for the period reached a new high.

THE AAA says the travel industry, hardly giving the new Congress a chance to warm its seat, is scrambling for repeal of the 15 per cent Federal tax on transportation. Says the winter cruise business, which isn't doing too well, would have looked better had it not had to cope with the tax . . . Guided tours are conducted twice a day at the United Nations headquarters at Lake Success. The tours, under the auspices of the American Association for the United Nations, visit the conference chambers and explain the workings of the U. N. Tickets are not needed.

Pioneer Valley Boasts 6 Brand New Ski Tows

NORTHAMPTON, Mass., Jan. 8.—Pioneer Valley, in western Massachusetts, has six new ski tows this year, making a total of 29 tows in the towns along the Connecticut River. Pioneer Valley is 3 hours by train from Grand Central in New York City, 2 hours from Boston.

The new tows are located at Ashfield, Millers Falls, Ware, Longmeadow and Russell; also at the State Reservation on Mount Tom.

At Millers Falls, a new area to be known as Crystal Notch Ski Area is located 1 mile west of the town on Route 2A on East Mineral Road. This is only 15 minutes from Greenfield, which has good train service from New York and the west. Two tows, large open slope, four trails are now ready. The whole area is approximately 50 acres, having rope tows of 700 and 800 feet. This area will have as instructor, Norman Ellms, formerly with the Appalachian Mountain Club, who says the layout is ideal for beginners.

Zurich Flight Set Jan. 17

The first scheduled passenger and cargo air service to Zurich, Switzerland, by a United States flag carrier will be established on January 17 when Trans World Airline dispatches the first flight from Washington.

TWA will operate two flights weekly in each direction between Zurich and the United States, with a third schedule to be added later in the year.

The inaugural flight will leave Washington National Airport on Monday, January 17, at 2:30 p. m., and arrive in Zurich at 7:55 p. m. (Zurich time) the next day.

The Everglades

Birds Find New National Park a Haven

By John O'Reilly

HOMESTEAD, Fla., Jan. 8.—Each of the 28 national parks has special features which have been preserved for the enjoyment of the people. In the case of the new Everglades National Park these features are the wildlife, particularly the countless flocks of strange birds, and the tropical trees and plants which grow nowhere else in the United States.

This natural richness was demonstrated during the first of several trips which this correspondent took into the park area. It was after nightfall as the car moved down the only road which penetrates the park. David Walters, who drove the station wagon, had to dodge holes in the road and birds in the air at the same time. Small, medium and large birds of the heron family flashed across the road in the glare of the headlights.

The effect was curious. From the trees the birds sprang across in front of the car. The majority were snowy egrets and American egrets, but occasionally a Ward's heron, the southern phase of the great blue heron, flapped frantically. Sometimes they were only a few feet from the windshield, and Walters had to apply the brakes to avoid them.

Clatter at Dawn

THE night was passed at Coot Bay Ranger Station, where Barney Parker, park maintenance man, talked of recent increases of many species of birds in the park. Water conditions had been good and protection was paying dividends.

At dawn we were awakened by cackling and squawking sounds all about us. Emerging from the shack we saw birds all around the station. A young great white heron perched on a piling. A group of Louisiana herons stood poised for minnows in the shallows behind the shack. Several pure white American egrets stood in the middle of the road.

But this was only the beginning. Soon the sky was dotted with wheeling flocks: white ibises with their curved bills and black wing tips, snowy egrets and American egrets, their white plumage standing out sharply against the morning sky, wood ibises, the only American storks.

Enter Old Bozo

AT this point the stocky figure of Barney Parker emerged from his shack and he began talking to the birds. His morning conversations with the birds are a daily ritual.

"Wonder where old Bozo is this mornin'," he yelled at us. "Probably out 'tom cattin' around again."

It was not long before Bozo appeared. He turned out to be a 10-foot alligator that has formed the habit of hanging around the ranger station. Bozo climbed out on the bank behind Parker's house to avail himself of the morning sun. At intervals all day long Mr. Parker hurls genial insults at his Saurian friend. If anybody wanted to shoot the alligator, he would have to shoot Parker first.

Big Cats Sighted

LEAVING the ranger station the car headed toward Cape Sable. In time open prairies stretched on either side of the road, which had become little more than a rough track.

Suddenly the driver stopped the car. Not far away a pair of large wildcats were making their way across the sawgrass. They were huge for bobcats. The driver estimated they would weigh 40 pounds or more apiece. Their color was so dark it appeared almost black. From time to time they stopped and turned back to look at the motionless car. From our point of view it was like watching lions on the African veldt. We watched until the cats disappeared from view in the scrub at the edge of the prairie.

After watching the bird life of the prairies for a time we headed back along the road, passing the fishing village of Flamingo, the only human community in the park.

About 90 species of trees and 100 shrubs, most of them West Indian types, occur in the park. There are also 8 species of native palms and 30 species of orchids.

It was late afternoon when the car again pulled up to the Coot Bay Ranger Station. The great flocks of birds were intent on catching their last fish before returning to the roosts for the night. The herons squawked and chattered in the mangroves and Barney Parker was swearing at Bozo.

Now, At Long Last

You Can Get Room In Hotel, Civility Too

IF you plan any traveling in 1949, you can count on getting a room at your favorite hotel just about any time you want it.

No arguing with room clerks, no waiting for hours in the lobby—and when you get into your room you'll probably find it recently redecorated or refurnished.

That's about the gist of the findings of two industry surveys released at the conclusion of a meeting of officials of the American Hotel Association.

One survey showed a drop in room occupancy to 86.4 per cent in October compared with 92.8 for the like month of 1947 and an average of 94 per cent during the war years. That 86.4 figure is uncomfortably close to the 83 to 84 per cent occupancy hotel men say is needed to break even.

The other survey showed hotels are spending two billion dollars of which 900 million dollars was spent this year and the remainder is to be expended in 1949—on a modernization program to attract more guests and increase operating efficiency.

J. E. Frawley, owner of the Fort Shelby at Detroit and several other Michigan and West Virginia hotels, said hotel room rents had increased on an average of only 17 per cent over prewar. But the hotels' own costs, he declared, have jumped many times that amount.

A statement read for Joe H. Adams of Miami, association president who was unable to attend the session, said: "Next year will tell the story for the future of our industry. Hotels must not only operate more efficiently, but they must use every business promotion device at their command to stay out of the red."

Spot in Argentine Andes Site for Travel Congress

SAN CARLOS DE BARILOCHE, in the famed Nahuel Huapi National Park of the Argentine Andes, has been selected as the meeting place of the Third Inter-American Travel Congress, it is announced by the travel division of the Pan American Union. The congress, previously slated to open at Buenos Aires last month, will be held February 15 to 24.

Official delegations of the 21 American republics and the Dominion of Canada, as well as observers representing many national and international organizations, will study an agenda which includes among other important items:

Simplification of passport and immigration regulations throughout the Americas; national and international financing of the travel industry; exchange control and its effect on tourist traffic; extension and improvement of transportation facilities and of hotel and other accommodations; coordination of official and travel promotion agencies; publicity and advertising; the Pan American Highway and the promotion of Inter-American automobile travel.

Other agenda topics of special tourist interest are: encouragement and development of native arts and crafts, preservation of regional or native customs, festivals, promotion of tourist sports, Olympic games and athletic tournaments.

The congress' organizing committee is headed by Dr. Juan Atilio Bramuglia, Minister of Foreign Affairs of Argentina.

The travel division of the Pan American Union, designated as permanent secretariat by the First Inter-American Travel Congress in San Francisco in 1939, is promoting the assembly in cooperation with the official Argentine sponsors.

Rule on Disk Shows Eased

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The rule against recording in network entertainment programs seems on the way out. Both NBC and CBS, long-time holdouts, have indicated their use now will be permitted under certain circumstances.

ABC and MBS have pioneered in such recordings, notable among which is the Bing Crosby show of ABC.

Without any apparent intention of stressing the development, CBS let it be known its new Basil Rathbone show for today would start out as a recorded series.

The network put it this way: "Since Mr. Rathbone is touring this season in the play 'The Heiress,' the first ten stories will be tape-recorded in Hollywood during his engagement there December 29 to January 8. Any necessary future transcriptions will be made in New York. When the tour closes, probably in April, the program will originate in New York as a live presentation."

NBC, in easing its ban against entertainment recordings, pointed out that Bob Hope's broadcast Tuesday before last was a transcription made in Berlin.

Benny's Hooper Rating Up, Heidt's Down After 1st Show

NEW YORK, Jan. 8 (AP).—In the flush of the attention directed his way at the change of networks, Jack Benny has won the first round of the Hooper ratings. A special checkup of his opening program on CBS gave him 27.8 per cent.

This compared with the 25.6 per cent he had attained to hold first place in the latest regular Hooper report, dated December 30, covering his final broadcasts on NBC.

On the other hand his new competitor, Horace Heidt, who took his old time on NBC, dropped considerably in the percentages. His 9.2 compared to 17.3 he had in the December 30 rating, when he was in tenth place.

Otherwise, this regular Hooper had Radio Theater second, followed in order by Walter Winchell, District Attorney, Phil and Alice, My Friend Irma, Fibber and Molly, Bob Hope and Charlie McCarthy.

The American Radio Relay League, whose members are amateur owners of radio communications stations, either code or voice, are planning a nation-wide hookup to relay gubernatorial messages of congratulation to President Truman on Inauguration Day, January 20.

The plan provides that an amateur operator in each capital of the States and territories be selected to start a message from his Governor on its way across the Nation on the eve of the inauguration. At the Capital the messages will be collected by member stations of the Washington Radio Club and delivered to the President some time on the 20th.

A similar relay was first set up back in the 20's.

ABC is of the opinion that its next documentary, the Berlin story, should get all possible attention. So the hour's dramatization is to be broadcast twice. After the original presentation Monday night, the detailing of the German situation will be repeated in full a week later on January 17. Each brodcast is to be at 9.

Lookout Good For European Tour by Auto

MOTORISTS who want to tour Europe this year with their own cars will have the advantages of improved highways abroad and reduced rates for shipping their automobiles across the Atlantic, John E. Potter of the AAA reports.

Potter said a survey made by the American Automobile Association shows that European highways are rapidly approaching prewar standards.

"Roads in western Europe now provide the best available means of transportation," Potter declared. "Since the end of the war highway reconstruction has proceeded at such a rapid pace that almost all regions of touring interest are now within reach."

The motor club leader said also that transatlantic steamship lines have agreed to cut car shipment rates from $600 to $500 for a round-trip, a rate which became effective January 1. "Though this will mean a substantial saving for travelers, economy becomes even more evident when the motorist abroad finds it possible to skirt the large, crowded cities and to stay at comfortable and moderately priced country inns," Potter added.

He said that nations of Europe make fuel allowances ample enough to meet the visitor's schedule, and that prices of gasoline and oil are generally moderate.

"Thank You For Loving Me So Much"

"Now it is different for me," writes Franco Davida, ten year old Italian boy who lost both legs as a result of war bombings, to his American foster parent. "Before, my friends had to carry me on their shoulders, and when they were not around I had to move on all fours . . . I thank you for the legs, and for loving me so much."

Franco is but one of thousands who have been maimed and disfigured by war. Funds are needed for plastic surgery, artificial eyes, and prosthetic limbs.

You alone, or a group can help the thousands of children now in desperate need overseas, by becoming a foster parent. You will receive a case history and photograph of the child. Correspondence through our office is encouraged.

The Plan is helping children of fourteen different nationalities in France, Poland, Belgium, Italy, Holland, England, Czechoslovakia and China. By aiding these children you are working for the greatest aim of all—for peace.

The Foster Parents' Plan does not do mass relief. Each child is treated as an individual with the idea that besides food, clothing, shelter, and education, the child will live in a homelike atmosphere and receive the loving care that so rightfully belongs to childhood.

Parade judges select

PRETTIEST TWINS

GUESSING WHICH TWIN has the Toni has become a favorite sport with the American public. In the past two years, glamorous look-alikes from all parts of the country have smiled out from advertising pages, daring readers to pick the one with the home permanent wave. When nine sets of the twins gathered recently, PARADE posed a new question: "Which twins are the most beautiful?"

The judges had no easy task, for the Toni sisters represent the last word in beauty, charm and poise. Finally selected were the youthful Crescente twins from Ridgewood, N. J. Honey blondes with blue eyes and creamy complexions, they are both 5'8" tall, weigh 119 and have the same bust, waist and hip measurements—34, 24 and 36 respectively. As Toni models, they not only receive salaries but can count on smart clothes and exciting trips. (Five sets of the twins recently flew to Europe as beauty envoys, received warm welcomes in England, Ireland, Scotland, Belgium and France. Others have gone to Cuba and Mexico.)

The tireless twins combine jobs as secretaries, models, airline stewardesses, dance instructors or just plain housewives with their Toni head-work.

Frances and Elizabeth Woods, 22, have jaunty poise, Southern accents, work as airline hostesses.

Only married twins in group are Katherine and Kathleene Ring, 22, of Chicago. They design dresses.

Alice and Alva Anderson, 18, were just out of high school when chosen as full-time Toni Twins last year.

A kiss for mother. At 16 the winning Crescente twins are still in school, but hope for careers. Kathleen, left, plays piano; Helene studies voice, art.

The Turning Point

Alex F. Osborn

Loss of a $10 job brought out a lucrative talent

THE YOUNG REPORTER shook melting snow from a frayed overcoat. Flaky crystals floated in the damp air, fell in tiny puddles on the city room's dusty, paper-strewn floor. Tossing his coat on a handy desk, the kid rubbed numbed hands, sat down to a battered, old typewriter. Shortly before midnight, his stint was done.

As he rose from the desk, a voice called, "Just a minute Osborn. I want to see you." Hurrying to the city editor, he heard, ". . . I'm sorry kid. You're fired."

To the 21-year-old cub only three months on the job, it meant the end of all his rosy dreams. Years of denial to put himself through college, to make ends meet on a cub reporter's scant pay so that one day his would be a big name in the newspaper game, now were fruitless.

The next day, peaked from a fitful night's sleep but with a scrapbook of his stories under his arm, he applied for a job on a rival paper. A worried city editor thumbed through the clippings. "As I expected, your writing is pretty amateurish," he commented. "But—there's an IDEA in every piece. I'll give you a trial."

That incident pointing up the unsuspected talent was never forgotten. It caused Osborn to make a fetish of creative imagination, even to the point of forcing himself to think up a new idea every day.

Today, Alex F. Osborn, vice chairman of the advertising agency, Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn, is author of a number of books on inspirational topics, the latest being "Your Creative Power: How to Use Imagination to Brighten Life, to Get Ahead." And, Osborn readily admits all his subsequent success stems from that dreary Saturday night when he was fired from a $10-a-week job as a cub reporter.

ON PARADE . . .

What to do on a rainy day might offer difficulty to some youngsters, but not to junior and his baby sister, Janice. All's well that ends well, and, in this case, it's sealed with a great big kiss.

"Playing train," kindergarten pupils in a New York school dramatize what they saw in film about a train, shown as part of audio-visual instruction.

Simplifying the Three R's

Audio-visual education opens dramatic paths to learning

BY KARL KOHRS

IN A KINDERGARTEN, forty wriggling tots suddenly become quiet as a picture of the wicked old Wolf, in Grandmother's clothing, is flashed on a projection screen. In another class, third graders watch a film on traffic safety, then act out what they have seen. A diminutive traffic cop, manipulating a paper traffic signal, halts youngsters in imaginary cars at an imaginary intersection and gives the green light to two little "pedestrians."

A dozen high school boys, grouped around a dismantled automobile engine, pause in their work to watch a sound film on car assembly. A class in Shakespeare, books open to Hamlet, follows the lines of the play as they listen to a recording of Maurice Evans in the role of the Dane. College medical students watch closely as moving dots and lines in a film "animation" chart the path of bacteria through a certain area of the body. A university broadcasts a college course for credit over an FM transmitter. An agricultural college in the corn belt telecasts information on crop production and animal care to farmers.

"Book larnin'" today has been supplemented by new tools of learning—audio-visual aids. Sight and sound are giving new life to words and are making the Three R's dramatic and fascinating. The approach is quicker and more direct. A survey made by Columbia University, for example, revealed that a 20-minute film can be equivalent to 120 minutes of reading time. U. S. Navy visual-aids experts estimated that films helped trainees learn up to 35 per cent more in a given period, and that they remembered what they saw and heard 35 per cent longer.

Production of educational films has brought about the development of a multi-million-dollar non-theatrical film industry. Some 20 large companies, along with scores of smaller producers, are making films on subjects ranging from table manners to higher mathematics. Currently available are more than 3,000 non-sponsored education films, designed to be used in schools and colleges in the same way as textbooks. About 35,000 16 mm. sound motion picture projectors and 125,000 35 mm. slide and filmstrip projectors, representing an investment of more than $16 million, are now in use in American schools.

Many of our larger cities have created special agencies to handle visual-aids programs, with full-time directors in charge. State departments of education are cooperating extensively. Nebraska is conducting an experimental program in 100 schools, Arizona has established film libraries in several teachers' colleges and Virginia has a million-dollar program in operation. Last year, Ohio appropriated $120,000 and California $800,000 for audio-visual needs. Some 1,011 cities spend about 35 cents a year for each pupil for audio-visual education.

The Teacher is Still Necessary

A scientist predicted thirty years ago that the use of motion pictures would make it possible to throw away the textbooks, dismiss the teachers and educate children on a schedule of three hours a day. But even if tomorrow's classroom is completely equipped with audio-visual aids, it is unlikely that learning will be a teacherless, painless process of tuning in on a dramatization of the theory of relativity to the accompaniment of soft music.

As Floyde E. Brooker, visual aids chief of the U. S. Office of Education, says of films: "They are not self-teaching devices any more than automobiles drive themselves. The teacher must select them, decide when they are to be used, then direct and finally evaluate their use. The film is a power, but whether for good or evil is determined by the user; and to the degree that it is a powerful and effective educational medium, it increases the responsibility of the user."

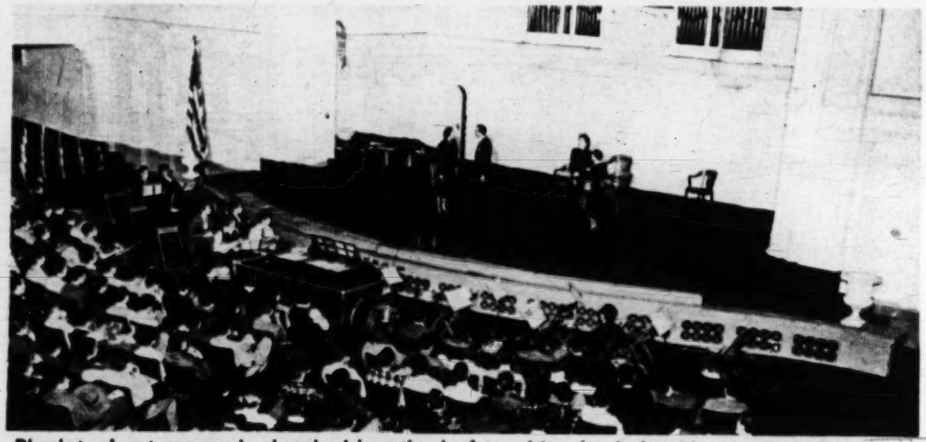
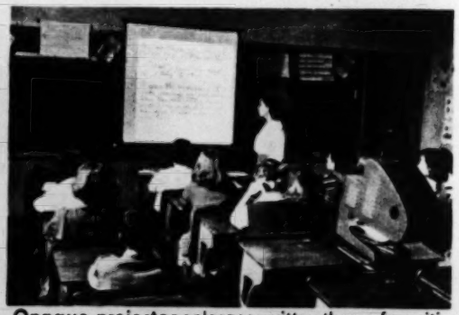
Modern teaching methods accent sight and sound



Playlet about cancer is visual-aid method of teaching basic health rules in high school.

Microprojector flashes enlargement of microscope slide (cornstalk section) on the screen for study.



Opaque projector enlarges written theme for criticism by students of junior-high composition class.

Television brings program to a Chicago school. Educational telecasts are in experimental stage.

Ceramics student puts finishing touches on models to be used as visual aids in history, animal study.

Recordings in music appreciation course mean more when pupils see, handle instruments.

Films, recordings, radio, television supplement textbooks, blackboards

THE FIRST INSTANCE of the use of visual education probably dates back to the time when prehistoric man scratched a crude drawing of a tiger on the walls of his cave to remind himself that a dangerous enemy lurked in the vicinity. The picture expressed what words could not. Today, the principle is much the same. The child who sees a film on traffic safety will remember that the policeman on the corner is there to protect him when he crosses the street on his way to school. A motion picture on refinery operation shown to science students will make their study of the molecular structure of crude oil more than a matter of tough equations. Historical exhibits seen on a field trip to a museum give new meaning to dates in history books. A pageant in which children of all races and creeds participate helps to break down traditional barriers of discrimination and prejudice.

Visual aids are by no means limited to the use of mechanical devices. The school journey or field trips, which was a favorite visual education aid in the 1890's, can be as effective in vitalizing learning as a sound film projector. Other traditional tools of study, such as still photographs, maps, globes, specimens and models, are necessary supplements to modern visual aids. An important part of visual education in the elementary school is the making of simple objects—models, dolls, paper cut-outs and even colored projector slides—by the children themselves.

Mechanical equipment currently in use in visual education programs includes sound-film projectors, slide-film (stationary) projectors, microprojectors, opaque projectors, stereopticans and record players. Newest additions are radios, tape and wire recorders, microfilm and television. Some equipment is rented, some owned outright by the schools. More and more schools are building up their own film libraries. Probably the best source of information on 16mm educational films and their adaptation to school uses is the Film Council of America, 6 West Ontario Street, Chicago 10, Ill., a non-profit, non-political volunteer organization operating under a Carnegie Foundation grant.

Radio is becoming increasingly important in the audio-visual field. Some 34 stations, broadcasting over regular channels, are located at universities and colleges throughout the country. Of particular interest is the opening of FM (frequency modulation) channels for school use. The Federal Communications Commission recently set aside 20 such channels for the use of non-commercial educational stations.

Chicago Schools Pioneer in Television

AS TO TELEVISION, probably the most extensive experimentation is being carried on in the Chicago public schools. Time was obtained from a local station, and receivers were borrowed and set up in actual classroom situations. A series of some 40 programs was broadcast in an effort to determine the most suitable types. The "how-to-do-it" program was found to be particularly adaptable to classroom telecasts.

Operation of the audio-visual aids program in New York City schools is typical of the way it works in larger cities. Under the direction of a Bureau of Visual Instruction, it operates on an annual budget of $125,000, averaging about 12½ cents per child. Certain schools—elementary, junior-high and high school—are designated as demonstration and servicing centers. These schools serve as proving grounds for new methods and techniques, and also as film library centers.

Audio-visual instruction is a regular part of the daily class schedule from the kindergarten through the high school. A typical elementary demonstration school schedules at least one period of visual instruction a week for every class. One large high school has as many as 70 periods a week. On a request form, the teacher designates the film he wishes to use. A service squad, made up of students, sets up the projector and prepares it for operation. In the lower grades, projectors are operated by the teachers, but in junior high and high school classes the machines are handled almost exclusively by the students themselves. High school "visual aid squads" check to see that each classroom has its equipment, take care of splicing, rewinding and storing films and train new students in the operation of projectors.

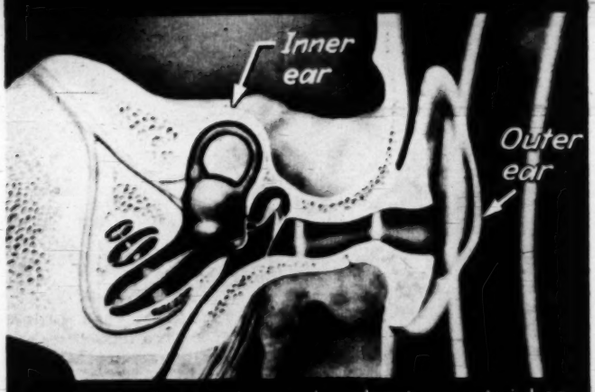
The goal of educators who seek to revitalize learning with audio-visual aids can be summed up in the comment of a 10-year-old girl. Referring to a film shown in class, she said:

"It makes the subject more alive. It makes learning fun."

NEW PLAN CORRELATES FILMS, TEXTBOOKS

Newest films are correlated with specially-written textbooks. Above: scene from film on table manners.

Adolescent problems are discussed in film on teaching. Films bring specialists into the classroom.



"Animation"—superimposed explanatory material on film—is technique used in medical motion picture.

Discipline is subject of film on teaching. Films run about 18 minutes, have supplemental quiz. THE END.

Shirley Talbott's smile wins title —"America's Loveliest Model"

Shirley Talbott, Conover Model, had just made her professional debut when she was named "America's Loveliest Model" in a nationwide contest conducted by a Washington, D. C., girls' club. A short year later, she dazzled the beauty judges again—out of 3,000 girls, she was picked as "America's Dream Girl."

But one successful career isn't enough for Shirley. She is studying dramatics, now...looking toward the stage and screen. Wherever her career takes her, Shirley's winning smile will never be outsparkled—it's a Pepsodent Smile! "I brush my teeth with Pepsodent twice a day," Shirley says. "That's one beauty rule I never break!"

The smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile!

Shirley Talbott knows it. And people all over America agree—the smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile! They've seen how Pepsodent removes the film that makes teeth look dull—uncovers new brightness in their smiles!

Wins 3 to 1 over any other tooth paste!

In recent tests, families from coast to coast were asked to compare delicious New Pepsodent with the tooth paste they were using at home. By an average of 3 to 1, they said New Pepsodent tastes better, makes breath cleaner and teeth brighter than any other tooth paste they tried. For the safety of your smile use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year!

These nine women have won seats in the 81st Congress . . .

Reva Beck Bosone, Utah Democrat, was floor leader of State House, city judge in Salt Lake City, now begins Congress term.

Veteran Mary T. Norton, New Jersey Democrat, has long record of service in House. Since 1924 she sponsored labor legislation.

Margaret Chase Smith, Maine, is first Republican woman senator. A House member since 1940, she succeeds former Sen. White.

Mrs. Cecile M. Harden, housewife and former school teacher from Covington, Ind., is newest Republican woman in the House.

Mrs. Chase Going Woodhouse is veteran Democratic worker, served House term in 1944, will represent Connecticut again.

Helen Gahagan Douglas, Democrat of California, is proud of her New Deal voting record. She's for housing, price control.

Rep. Katherine St. George, New York Republican, is serving second term in House. She unseated Tuxedo Gus Bennett.

Rep. Frances P. Bolton, a Republican from Ohio, now begins fifth term in House. Colleagues respect her keen, orderly mind.

Rep. Edith Nourse Rogers, Massachusetts Republican, has been in House since 1925. She is interested in veterans' rights.

Women in Congress

Through the years their numbers—and influence—have grown

BACK IN 1917, Jeannette Rankin, of Missoula, Mont., a champion of women's suffrage, became the first woman ever to serve in the halls of Congress. Since then, more than a dozen U. S. women have joined the House of Representatives and two of them, Hattie Caraway of Arkansas and Margaret Chase Smith of Maine were elected to "the greatest deliberative body of men in the world," the United States Senate.

Of the nine woman seated in the 81st Congress, five (including Maine's Senator Smith) are Republicans, four are Democrats. In legislative ipterests they range from tax experts to social welfare sponsors, in political complexion they vary from progressive to conservative. One is a member of the House Labor Committee, another has long been associated with veteran's affairs, a third is a fighter for social reform. Like their male counterparts, many are specialists in foreign affairs, or in domestic economic problems.

But — unlike Mrs. Rankin — few of today's Congresswomen are concerned solely with speaking for their sex. The modern woman in Congress no longer waves the 19th Amendment in front of her colleagues, no longer thunders that she is the voice of the American mother. Instead she behaves much like the staid male of the species. Her interests—and his—have become one with the interests of people back home.

Life in Fort Myers is quiet, leisurely.

Florida's West Coast

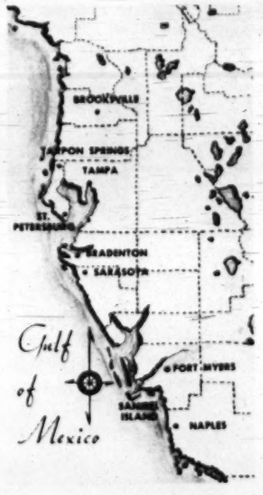
ALTHOUGH BOTH COASTS of Florida boast about the same warm sunshine to lure winter visitors, the other attractions of the east and west shores of this southern playground differ as greatly as the type of visitor they entertain.

The east coast attracts, among others, the big-money crowd—lavish spenders for whom solicitous proprietors have provided everything to make spending easy and attractive.

The west coast is different. Stretching from Pensacola to its southernmost tip and washed by the Gulf of Mexico, the 800-mile west coastline is for vacationists who would rather play shuffleboard or bridge than go to the races and night clubs. Compared with the east coast, prices are moderate and with a reason. Even the big hotels on the west coast, like the Manatee River at Bradenton, the Bayshore Royal in Tampa, and the Whispering Sands at Sarasota, depend to a great extent on a clientele sufficiently satisfied that it is happy to return year after year.

Most of the persons who visit the west coast want the simpler pleasures, and the chambers of commerce of the Florida towns, the hotels, motels, trailer courts and inn keepers, see that they get it. Moreover, visitors to that section want solid value received for their money. Businessmen there feel it is good business to give it, not only to insure return engagements, but to interest visitors in buying land with the idea of establishing permanent homes or as a spot for retiring. Many visitors have already done just that — wealthy people who like the quiet way of life, doctors, lawyers, teachers, writers, stenographers and storekeepers.

Whether visitors go to the west coast for bathing, boating, fishing, hunting, or just to loaf, prices are moderate. Luxury hotels may charge $5 to $15 a day European plan and $25 to $35 a day American plan, but adequate accommodations, in smaller hotels, can be had for much less. Many, however, are solidly booked.



For the motorist, tourist courts and motels dot the landscape; in St. Petersburg alone about 100 new sites have been opened this season. New building developments are going up all along the coast. Clearwater, in fact, has reached an all-time yearly high.

Anyone visiting Florida's west coast can expect a good time at a fair price, but first the tourist has to get there.

Sun bathing and swimming are the main attractions up and down the coast. Famous Lido Beach is owned and operated by the city of Sarasota—winter home of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey Circus. Bathers rent lockers for 35 cents, can use the pool or the beach.

Naples has only one large hotel and little else to accommodate tourists but offers excellent beach and fishing from pier and boats.

One of the newest attractions in Florida is the underwater ballet, performed in crystal-like Weekiwachee Springs, Brooksville.

The "big" city of St. Petersburg, a popular shopping center, has swimming and fishing, three yacht basins for seagoing tourists.

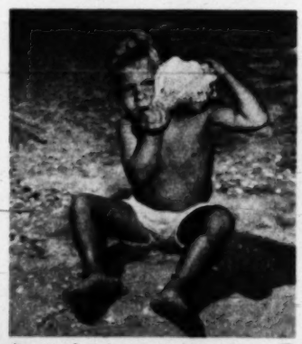
Travel is better this year

WHETHER YOU ARE GOING to Florida by plane, train or bus, your chances this year of getting there without paying black market prices for travelling accommodations are good.

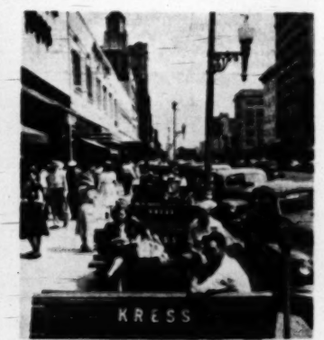
Schedules have been stepped up; the railroads have increased the number of trains and the number of cars per train. Eastern and National airlines and the non-scheduled lines will be able to transport about 1,800 passengers a day. Stricter regulations on cancellations also make the travel picture brighter.

Of course, there are some shortages. Reservations on days of peak travel and for the choicest accommodations are almost impossible to get. But if you are willing to settle for less, your chances of a comfortable journey are very good.

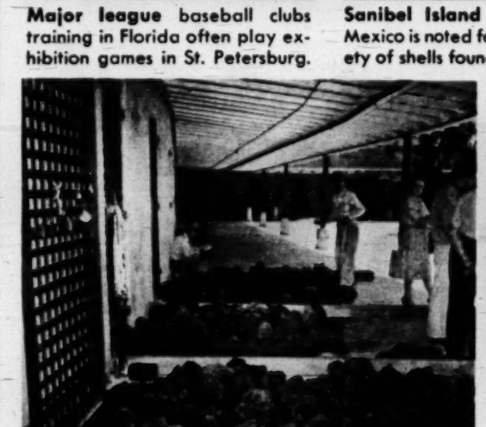
Major league baseball clubs training in Florida often play exhibition games in St. Petersburg.



Sanibel Island in the Gulf of Mexico is noted for the great variety of shells found on its beaches.



St. Petersburg has a large shopping center. Gulf beaches are 35 miles from this part of the town.



Sponge capital of the country, Tarpon Springs has a large Greek population who give city a decidedly foreign flavor. Storehouses are open to the tourist.

Shuffleboard, cards, chess and checkers are among the attractions at the Fort Myers community center which is operated by the city's Chamber of Commerce.

Pumpkin Cheesecake Pie

The all-American favorite, pumpkin pie, and the ever-popular cheese cake, lend their best features to a new, delicious dessert, Pumpkin Cheesecake Pie.

Combine two favorites for a delightful dessert . . . .

BY BETH MERRIMAN

"MY HUSBAND expressed a wish for pumpkin pie and my sister wanted cheesecake. So, to please them both, I combined the two in one dessert," says Mrs. Rose Needham of Long Beach, Calif., in entering her original recipe for Pumpkin Cheesecake Pie in PARADE'S recipe contest. Mrs. Needham adds that both husband and sister were well pleased, and we believe it, because this is truly a delightful dessert! So serve it soon, and win praises from your family.

Pumpkin Cheesecake Pie

15 graham crackers
2 tbsp. brown sugar
¼ cup butter or margarine, melted
½ lb. cottage cheese
1 cup canned pumpkin
2 egg yolks
¾ cup sugar
½ teaspoon nutmeg
3 teaspoons cornstarch
¾ cup top milk
1 tbsp. grated lemon rind
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 teaspoon lemon extract
2 egg whites

Roll graham crackers into fine crumbs; combine with brown sugar and melted butter or margarine. Set aside ¼ cup. Press remaining mixture firmly into deep 9-inch pie pan. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., 8 minutes. Cool. Press cottage cheese through a fine sieve; combine with pumpkin, unbeaten egg yolks, sugar, nutmeg; mix well. Blend cornstarch to thin paste with some of the milk; add remaining milk; combine with cheese mixture. Add lemon rind, juice, extract. Beat egg whites stiff; fold in. Spoon into pie pan. Sprinkle top with reserved crumbs. Bake in moderate oven, 350°F., ½ hour, or until inserted knife comes out clean. Allow the pie to cool, then serve.

The first step in making the filling is to press the cottage cheese through a fine sieve, a little at a time.

Next, combine cheese with the pumpkin, unbeaten egg yolks, sugar and nutmeg; blend together thoroughly.

Aluminum pie pan is scalloped and grooved for easy serving. Press Crumb Crust firmly on bottom and sides.

BORDERLINE ANEMIA

can make color fade, energy bog down!

ARE you fighting a tired, listless feeling? Do you drag your weary way through every day? Has the blush of health and beauty departed from your cheek?

These effects often result from a blood condition. Perhaps you have a Borderline Anemia, resulting from a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency. Perhaps your red blood cells are too faded and puny and weak to transmit full energy to every fibre and sinew.

Results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have this Borderline Anemia.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

Take Ironized Yeast Tablets if you're too pale, too tired because of this blood deficiency. They are specially formulated to help build up red blood cells—thus restore vigor. That stuff sure does go up faster than it comes down.

Did you ask about A BULLET'S SPEED?

ALL IS PEACEFUL and quiet again on the PARADE quiz front. Thomas C. Kizer has struck his colors, and everyone agrees that a little old bullet will go up faster than it comes down.

PARADE readers will remember Kizer of Lynbrook, Long Island, as the arch conspirator who firmly pressed the crown of thorns on our brow with a mathematical formula (PARADE, Nov. 21) to prove we were all wet in an answer to a quiz question (PARADE, Oct. 3) when we said that a bullet goes up faster than it descends. Kizer wasn't the only one to disagree. As was remarked at the time, "From Maine to Texas came a flood of reader dissent."

The opposition now has vanished like a snowball in mid-July. Kizer contritely capitulates in a little note that reads: "The little woman got hold of PARADE first yesterday and first thing I knew I was sitting here in the corner wearing a nice new dunce cap.

"So PARADE IS RIGHT. I am wrong. It was a good scrap and the best man won. One thing I know—I am not going to carry on the argument and tangle with such erudite gentlemen as Dr. Havens" (Dr. William Havens, asst. professor of physics at Columbia).

There's nothing quite so popular as a bandwagon. Originally about four out of five letters referred to us "blundering idiots." These enthusiastic correspondents couldn't understand how anyone could be so stupid as to fail to know that a bullet goes up and down at the same rate of speed.

Since our explanation a few weeks ago, hundreds of letters have come in, and there isn't a dissension among them. All are kindly and solicitous, offering further proof that we were right and wishing us well. Typical are these excerpts:

"I sincerely hope that in some small way I have been able to improve the mental health of your Quiz Department."—Victor F. Lucht, Ordnance Dept., Pentagon Bldg.

"If this will help you any to answer your question about 'How High Is Up' and this T. C. Kizer who went to all that mathematics to figure the speed of a bullet, here is some ballistic data of different types of ammunition . . ."—Norman Wright, Elizabeth, N. J.

This Is The Problem

I THINK I can clarify the problem discussed in the article 'How High Is Up and What Makes It Stay!' The problem is this: when a bullet is shot . . ."—Thomas Jonaitis, Woodhaven, Long Island.

"Your technical advice on this subject is correct and has been proven so by quite extensive experimentation."—E. L. Peck, Erie, Pa.

"As my contribution, I would expect the down sequence to require about twice the time of the up sequence." — G. A. Speedie, Arlington, Mass.

And so they go. Hundreds and hundreds of them. Don't you think life is wonderful?

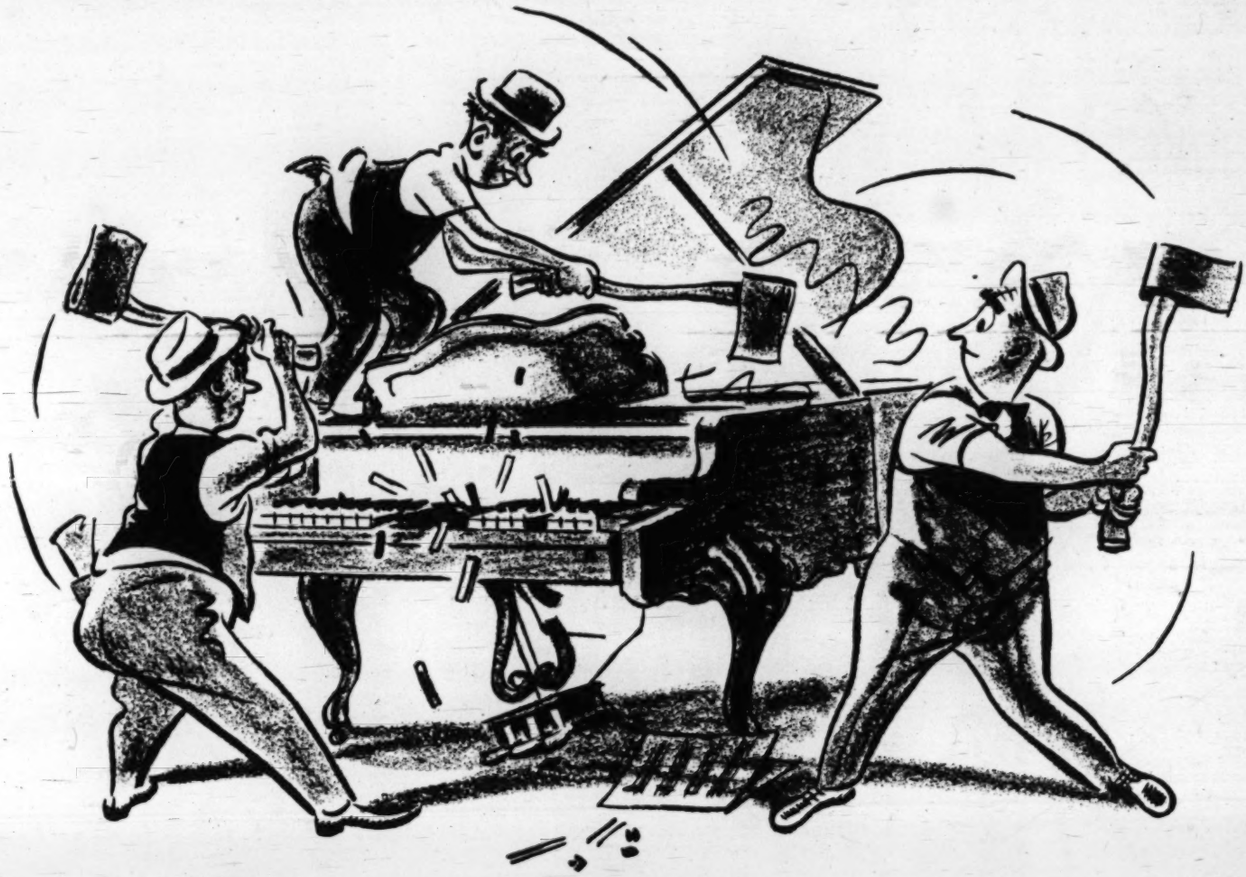
The Future Of the Movies?

Are the leaders of the movie industry worried about television? Do they expect to recover foreign markets? Why is Hollywood jittery today? For the answers be sure to read PARADE, next Sunday.



How to tune a piano!

The piano's out of tune. So we'll chop it up. Then we'll get a tin horn instead.

Sure, these men are crazy.

But they're using the same kind of thinking a lot of people have been using on the American economic system lately.

Our American way isn't perfect. We still have our ups and downs of prices and jobs. We'll have to change that. But even so, our system works a lot better than the second-rate substitutes being peddled by some countries we could mention.

It works better because of a few simple things. We are more inventive, and we know how to use machine power to produce more goods at lower cost. We have more skilled workers than any other country. We believe in collective bargaining and enjoy its benefits. And we Americans save—and our savings go into new tools, new plants, new and better machines.

Because of this, we produce more every working hour . . . and can buy more goods with an hour's work than any other people in the world.

We can make the system work even better, too: by all of us working together to turn out more for every hour we work—through better machines and methods, more power, greater skills, and by sharing the benefits through higher wages, lower prices, shorter hours.

It's a good system. It can be made better. And even now it beats anything that any other country in the world has to offer.

So—let's tune it up, not chop it down.

Want to help? Mail this!

I want to help.

I know that higher wages, lower prices, shorter hours and larger earnings can all result from producing more goods for every hour all of us work.

Therefore, I will ask myself how I can work more effectively every hour I am on the job, whether I am an employee, an employer, a professional man or a farmer.

I will encourage those things which help us produce more and add to everyone's prosperity—things like greater use of mechanical power, better machines, better distribution and better collective bargaining.

I will boost the good things in our set-up, and help to get rid of the bad.

I will try to learn all I can about why it is that Americans have more of the good things of life.

Please send me your free booklet, "The Miracle of America" which explains clearly and simply, how a still better living can be had for all, if we all work together.

The Gambling Independents

Borrowing studios, stars, they make some of Hollywood's outstanding movies

By ERNEST LA FRANCE and SID ROSS

Photographs by Ben Ross

Concluding its series on the movies, PARADE, next week, will tell how industry leaders plan to cure Hollywood's depression.—Kay Sullivan, Movie Editor.

ROUGHLY SPEAKING, there are three kinds of Hollywood producers: regular producers who work on salary for the big film companies; semi-independent producers who work with funds, stars, and studios provided by the companies; and independents who like to shoot the works and be free.

One of the youngest and smartest of the rugged individualists is Lester T. (for Ty Cobb) Cowan, who has just finished what promises to be one of the gayest pictures of 1949, the $1,200,000 squirrel-fest, "Love Happy," with Harpo, Chico and Groucho Marx, Ilona Massey, Vera-Ellen, Marion Hutton, a bevy of dancing girls, and a plot revolving around some Romanoff jewels.

It is a tribute to the independent spirit that he made it with borrowed (in the case of the Marx Brothers, cajoled) stars, with rented studios and cameras, and with borrowed money.

Depending on how you look at it, independents in general, and Cowan in particular, are either a menace to Hollywood's venerable institutions or they are the few rays of sunlight in the perfumed gloom. With no purpose in life except to make pictures good

Loan of $540,000 is arranged with financier Bernard Giannini of Bank of America.

Vaudeville stage set, rented from RKO for $3,500 a day, saved cost of constructing new one. To save extra day's rent, Cowan kept cast and crews at work until midnight.

Directing stars personally, Cowan coaches Chico Marx in kiss scene with Ilona Massey.

Pre-dawn yogurt and sandwich snack with publicist Bob Armstrong ends 18-hour day.

enough to keep them temporarily out of debt, they are a throwback to the days when Hollywood was young.

Was a Company Producer at 28

Cowan has all the basic requirements —ideas, guts, brains, gift-of-gab, and a reluctance to call any man "Master." Born in Akron, Ohio, on April Fool's Day, 1906, he peddled papers at seven, became the 108-pound Ohio state boxing champ at 15, worked his way through Stanford University as a cub reporter for a San Francisco paper, wrote the first syllabus for a college course on moviemaking, ended up as executive head of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in his mid-twenties. Believing he could make better pictures than were being made, he turned company producer at the age of 28 (making, among others, "The Whole Town's Talking" and "You Can't Cheat An Honest Man"), bolted to the independents at 37.

The life history of "Love Happy" is as good an illustration as any of the way an independent works. Looking for another story after "G.I. Joe" and "Tomorrow, the World," he talked Ben Hecht into writing, on a partnership basis, a rough script for Harpo Marx. With the script as bait, he talked the Marx Brothers into joining the act, also as partners. With Hecht and the Marx Brothers, he added Mary Pickford as a "silent partner," formed Artists Alliance, Inc., borrowed $540,000 from Bank of America, another $150,000 from a finance company and went to work. In an industry that is a gamble, he must win. The rewards, as well as risks, are high. The Cowans are Hollywood's conscience and challenge.

STOP-
loosening your skin!

MAKE THIS TEST! You will be shocked to find out how loose your skin really is!

DO THIS! Sit before your mirror. Do exactly as the girl is doing in the picture above. If folds of skin roll up under your eyes, you have loose skin! This loose skin may easily wrinkle too soon causing you to look much older than you really are!

Millions are actually loosening delicate skin tissues around their eyes in the very act of creaming their skins.

But this old way of skin care is rapidly being discarded. Well informed women are adopting skin care that ends destructive rubbing.

My Lady Esther 4 Purpose Face Cream is self-acting. No more need for rubbing at all. Think what this means!

When you use my cream that requires no rubbing, you are not loosening your skin—you are not deepening fine lines! In short, you stop helping your skin to grow loose and older looking. You help to preserve tone, elasticity and smoothness your skin naturally has.

Clearer Skin, Too, The First Day

What's more, I can promise you a clearer skin the first day you stop rubbing dirt-laden cream back into tiny skin crevices and into pore mouths.

Here's why. The cleansing ingredient in Lady Esther 4 Purpose Face Cream is self-acting—it has the power to surround each tiny particle of stale make-up and grime and separate it from the skin. It literally lifts dirt away from your skin! No destructive rubbing is necessary—just smooth it on and tissue it off!

What to Expect

Your first trial will convince you that my 4 Purpose Face Cream is self-acting (no more rubbing) and that it makes your skin far cleaner than before, without rubbing.

So get any size jar—even the smallest size is ample to prove that you don't have to rub your skin any more to clean it.

And remember, this one cream does 4 things for your skin. Besides self-acting cleansing—it smooths! —it aids the natural pore-refining process!—and it makes a perfect powder base!

GET TWO CANS FOR CONVENIENCE

Back plasters are the one product made for 3-way relief of muscular backache:

(1) The plaster stirs up circulation, brings the healing and warming blood to the sore spot. Tense muscles relax and the pain eases. (2) It straps twitching muscles—cuts down those jabs of pain. (3) The protective pad guards against chilling.

Tests by doctors show that Johnson's BACK PLASTER helps nearly 9 out of 10 sufferers. It's made by Johnson & Johnson—known for fine surgical products for 61 years. At all drug stores.

Checking props, Cowan prepares Harpo for scene in which thugs working for Ilona Massey frisk him for missing Romanoff jewels, find everything from cake of ice to barber pole.

Economy-minded, Cowan snubs production manager R. Heinz for wasting $117 penguin fee.

Theme, "Love Happy," and entire score were written by Cowan's wife, composer Ann Ronnell.

Freedom to make movies as they want makes independents take risks

AS AN INDEPENDENT, Cowan is in some of Hollywood's best company: Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Walt Disney, Walter Wanger, Sol Lesser, Eddie Small, Sam Bischoff, Merian C. Cooper, and the Cagneys, to name a few. D. W. Griffith, Doug Fairbanks, Sr., and the great Irving Thalberg were independents. Sam Goldwyn, called the dean of independents, was nominated for 29 Academy awards in 29 years; David O. Selznick, a dozen in ten years. The coveted Thalberg Award went to independents three times out of six. In recent years, Fred MacMurray, Humphrey Bogart and George Raft have all taken a flier at the big gamble.

Out to make a killing with every picture, the independents—Cowan with them—automatically rid themselves of many of the faults that beset the big film factories. With no huge studios that have to be fed continuously or closed down, they are more particular about plots. With no stars of their own to keep busy, they are less likely to inject misfits in their casts. With tighter finances, they keep their pictures free of the clutter that spoils many company epics.

In making "Love Happy," Cowan stripped away all nonsense except the nonsense of the plot. David Miller, a young director who had never done a big picture before and wanted a chance, was paid a fraction of what established big-wigs would have claimed. Arrangements were made to use the General Service Studios for around $130,000 (in contrast to the half million major companies charge against their pictures for studio overhead). Groucho Marx's role was tailored down to that of a commentator appearing on the screen only at the beginning and end of the picture. A rococo art-work title that would have cost producer Cowan $10,000 was whittled to an equally-effective one that cost only $1,500.

Cowan got his wife to write the music and his brother, Bob, to serve as casting director. His wife, the talented ex-Radcliffe girl Ann Ronnell, who has written "Rain on the Roof," "Big Bad Wolf," "Willow, Weep for Me" and "Baby's Birthday Party," even gave the picture its final name along with its theme song, "Love Happy." (It had originally been called "Hearts and Diamonds.")

Locked Writers in their Rooms

COWAN, SO BUSY AT the telephones that Hollywood began calling him "The Man With Telephones Growing Out of His Ears," ran "Love Happy" like a well-organized battle. Writers, always fallible amid the distractions of city life, were marooned on the 40-acre Cowan San Fernando Valley ranch, equipped with nothing but a soda fountain and soft drinks. "I lock 'em in their rooms and they have to write," he says. On one occasion, he hauled a pleasure-seeking writer out of the swimming pool and drove him to the typewriter screaming, "Get back there and make me another million dollars!"

A major studio shoots far more film than it can possibly use. Cowan planned "Love Happy" to run about 80 minutes, shot only about 110,000 feet of film, about 75,000 less than normal. "I cut my films every night," he explains. "If I don't like a scene, I re-do it right away, rather than re-shoot several scenes after it is too late." If necessary, he doesn't even stick to the script. On one occasion (above) he stomped furiously away from his production manager because a set was not ready in time for a trained penguin, which had been hired at $117 a day.

For all the trouble, Cowan may get very little. All told, "Love Happy" cost about $950,000 to make (not counting the last minute $75,000 that had to be borrowed to complete it). Another $150,000 will be needed for advertising and prints. United Artists, linked to Cowan's Artists Alliance by Mary Pickford, a partner in both, will take 25 per cent of the first $800,000 netted at the box office and 10 per cent thereafter. The Bank of America has first claim on its $540,000 "first money." The finance company will then take back the $150,000 "second money," and the Chemical Bank of New York will have to be paid its last-minute loan, all with interest. In addition, Mary Pickford and all the other partners will have to be paid for what they advanced in cash or services.

Why does Cowan take chances? He has a good answer: "I didn't reject jobs with the big companies just for fun. The basic satisfaction in life is to be able to select what you're going to do and how you're going to do it. In a big studio you're hemmed in." Hollywood's depression may ruin the independents. It will be a loss.

Telephones are kept in reach even when Cowan relaxes at 40-acre ranch in San Fernando Valley. Known as "Cowan's Workshop," it has bungalows for writers to protect them from distractions of the city.

Sometimes independents win, sometimes they don't . . .

Independent actor-producer team of George Raft, Sam Bischoff make movies as Star Films, Inc.

Dean of independents, Sam Goldwyn, makes some of Hollywood's best movies, borrows stars.

Merian C. Cooper and director John Ford formed own Argosy Productions, made "Fort Apache."

Unlucky Sam Briskin, Frank Capra, other top-notchers fared badly in Liberty Films. THE END.

Before your daughter marries... should you tell her These Intimate Physical Facts?

BY ALL MEANS! And here is scientific up-to-date information You Can Trust —

The time to speak frankly to your daughter is before she marries. She should be fully informed on how important vaginal douching two or three times a week often is to feminine cleanliness, her health, marriage happiness, to combat odor and always after menstrual periods.

And she should be made to realize that no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide tested for the douche is SO POWERFUL yet SO SAFE to tissues as modern ZONITE!

How unfortunate is the young woman who, through ignorant advice of friends, uses such 'kitchen makeshifts' as vinegar, salt or soda. These are NOT germicides in the douche! They never can give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of ZONITE.

Won't you please realize how very important it is to use a germicide definitely intended for vaginal douching—one powerfully germicidal yet one safe to tissues as ZONITE has proved to be for years.

ZONITE positively contains no phenol, no bichloride of mercury, no harsh acids—overstrong solutions of which may damage tissues and in time even hinder functional activity of the mucous glands. You can use ZONITE as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury. It's positively non-poisonous, non-irritating.

Truly A Modern Miracle!

ZONITE destroys and removes odor-causing waste substances. Leaves you feeling so sweet and clean. Helps guard against infection. ZONITE kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure amazing ZONITE DOES KILL every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying. Buy today!

"Have you something with the scent of uranium? He's an atomic scientist."

Both parents should share responsibility of bringing up child say authors of "Your Baby."

Advice to Fathers

You, too—say authors of new book—should help care for baby

IF YOU HAVE just become a father—and consequently are feeling particularly useless right now—you may glean some comfort from a book called "Your Baby"* which advances the somewhat revolutionary theory that fathers are people, too.

"Fathers are important," write Gladys Denny Shultz and Lee Forrest Hill, the authors, "and don't let your mother-in-law tell you otherwise."

In support of these cheering words, Mrs. Shultz (a child care expert) and Dr. Hill (a pediatrician) fill their book with advice to fathers (and mothers) in the care and handling of their frequently bewildering offspring. It is the authors' belief that only by sharing in the care of a child do fathers get to know him. They suggest that Dad begin early—even before the baby is born—by taking over the responsibility of furnishing the new arrival's room, by accompanying Mother in her visits to the obstetrician and by understanding the state of pregnancy and the effects it sometimes may have on the disposition of his wife.

When the baby comes home, it is the author's advice that Dad get down to work at once. He should assume one feeding a day, they believe, and, in addition, he should help out with the housework. "If you can cook," they suggest, "this is the time to start working out in the kitchen."

Mother, they point out, will need all the help she can get on her return from the hospital.

As a start, Mrs. Shultz and Dr. Hill recommend that the father take over the baby for an hour each night upon his return home from work. "No matter how busy you may think you are," they write, "you will be making the mistake of your life if you cheat yourself out of the close acquaintance with your youngsters which comes only from assuming some responsibility for their care."

There are many things which only Mother can do, the authors concede, "but Dad's understanding his job will help her do them better."

If father feeds, bathes, dresses baby occasionally they will soon get to know each other.

Have you ever wondered how the truly great books have become "classics"? First, they are so readable. They would not have lived unless they were read; they would not have been read unless they were interesting. To be interesting they had to be easy to understand. And those are the very qualities which characterize these selections: readability, interest, simplicity.

THE GOLDEN HAWK by FRANK YERBY

Even More Exciting Than THE FOXES OF HARROW

HERE'S the blazing tale of a bold buccaneer and the wild-cat beauty who fought him and loved him! Men shuddered as they spoke of the Golden Hawk, the yellow-haired looter from Cadiz—but to women he was the fulfillment of a dream! Exotic passion in the pirate-infested, gold-laden Caribbean Sea of the 17th century. "Whips along like a prairie fire!"—Boston Globe.

EAGLE IN THE SKY by F. VAN WYCK MASON

A Swirling, Lusty Tale of Heroes, Traitors and Rogues!

THIS superb historical romance is a dramatic novel about three young physicians, the women they loved, and the part they played in the Revolution! You'll thrill to tremendous adventure as you follow Asa through battles—Lucius into the intrigues of high society—Peter down to the south seas and into the irresistible arms of blond Trina! Here's dark diplomacy and desperate action – scores of heroic, tragic and infamous characters!

THE QUEEN'S PHYSICIAN by EDGAR MAASS

What Did the Queen Want... the Cure or the Doctor?

WAS she really sick . . . or did this beautiful and flirtatious young queen just want to be alone with the handsome new court physician? You'll thrill to this incident-packed story of a passion that raised a commoner to power over a kingdom! Here is true history as lively and exciting as Forever Amber—moving across the glittering, intrigue-ridden royal court of 18th century Denmark.

ANNIE JORDAN by MARY BRINKER POST

The Red-Headed Cinderella Who Broke All the Rules!

AT thirteen, she danced for coins on the table of a sailors' cafe, and at fifteen, she knew the first heart-break of love. Annie learned at an early age that nothing in life comes easy, especially to a humble girl in love with the handsome son of a prominent family. How she fought her way to happiness makes a delightful and heart-warming story—the best of its kind since A Tree Grows in Brooklyn.

FAIR WIND TO JAVA by GARLAND ROARK

A Hurricane of Passion and Strife from Boston to the Far-off Orient!

A SEA CAPTAIN'S fantastic scheme for sudden wealth . . . a beautiful ship jinxed by the grudge her owner bore her . . . a Boston heiress' double game of love and rivalry . . . an exotic woman's price in the East Indies slave trade . . . these set the fast pace of this roaring new sea novel by the author of the famous "Wake of the Red Witch." Here's romance as colorful as the Arabian nights—as exciting as a tribal tom-tom!

PILGRIM'S INN by ELIZABETH GOUDGE

The Newest Hit by the author of "Green Dolphin Street"

MILLIONS of book-lovers and movie-goers were enchanted by "Green Dolphin Street." Now its famous author tells the story of a woman who had to choose between her marriage and a forbidden love! How the magic of a peaceful old seaside inn helped her decide; how it influenced the lives of all whom it sheltered—makes one of the year's finest novels. If you enjoy romance with a touch of mystery, this book is for you!
